ZAIMIS DECLINES POST AS PREMIER

Pleas Ill Health, Says Athens Report—London Express Criticizes Venizelos.

London, Oct. 3.—Alexander Zaimis, who was named as the new Greek premier by the revolutionary committee, has sent a message to the committee declining the appointment on the ground of ill health, according to Reuters Athens correspondent.

London, Oct. 3.—If the amount of space given by the press can be regarded as an index of popular concern, this country is on the tip of expectancy and curiosity concerning the meeting between representatives of the allies and the Turkish Nationalists, at Mudania today.

In anti-Greek quarters the activities of former Premier Venizelos in Paris and London continued to be viewed with the greatest suspicion.

The Daily Express says Mr. Venizelos has advised the revolutionary government in Athens to agree in principle to the evacuation of Eastern Thrace but to tell the allies that Greece will not evacuate the territory until the powers have decided she shall do so as part of the final peace terms.

The newspaper says the effect of this plan, if adopted, would be that the Greek army would remain in Thrace for many weeks longer and that the conditions arising from this inevitably would bring war between the British and Turkey. It calls upon the British government and public to put a stop to "this dangerous intrigue."

Frederickton, N. B., Oct. 3.—Donald Fraser, of Fraser Companies, Limited, predicts that there will be serious forest fires in October unless all people exercise uncommon care with regard to a few days. All streams are low and some springs and brooks have disappeared entirely. Vegetation was killed by early frosts and has been dried to tinder by the warm weather which followed. It is recollected that the great Miramichi fire occurred in October during a season much like the present.

Allan J. Neale, of Royal Road, W. L. Malby, of Plaster Rock, and Wilbur Elliott, of Devon were examined on Monday afternoon by the great scalars by A. T. Murchie, chief scaler of the province, and N. A. McAdams, chief scaler of the N. B. Railway Co.

TURK FORCES STEP BACK IN CHANAK AREA
Constantinople, Oct. 3.—The Turkish cavalry has retired from its advanced positions in the Chanak area, decreasing the danger of conflict there. This withdrawal, which is described in messages from the Dardanelles as "slight," was supposed here to be in consequence of word received by the Turks that the Mudania conference was in session. The Turks, however, were said still to be well within the neutral zone.

MOOSE VISITS THE CITY AND GETS A FALL
A large bull moose paid a visit to the city last night but found bright lights dazzling and as a result came near losing his life. The animal was first noticed on top of Fort Howe hill and soon afterwards started to make a descent to Main street, over the hill above the railing leading to Rockland road. At this section it is very steep and the moose lost his footing and fell forty or fifty feet. When it struck it lay still for some seconds and people who witnessed the mishap thought the animal had been killed, but it staggered to its feet and becoming frightened at the crowd rapidly collected off and headed up Elm street. Some followed the animal, but it soon disappeared in the rear of Lansdowne avenue and it was thought it found its way back to its native haunts in the woods back of the rifle range.

WRECK SENDS THE OCEAN LTD. OUT OF COURSE
Quebec, Oct. 3.—The wreck of twenty-five loaded freight cars of a train composed of fifty-two cars yesterday afternoon, twenty-one miles below Riviere Du Loup at a place called Tobins Grade, was the cause of the Ocean Limited, due at Lewis at night, having to change its direction and travel over the Transcontinental line to Montreal. Telegraph poles were knocked down by the wrecked cars and the lines have not yet been repaired, but trains running toward Montreal will probably arrive on time. There were no casualties.

PARIS CASE TO JURY TODAY

Chief Justice Concludes His Charge This Afternoon—Attorney General Completes His Address.

The conclusion of the attorney-general's address to the jury and the beginning of the judge's charge marked this morning's session of the trial of John Paris for murder. Hon. Mr. Byrne spoke for an hour and a half and the court took fifteen minutes' recess after which, at 11:45, Chief Justice H. A. McKeown commenced his charge to the jury. He purposely did not finish this morning as was the completion of his charge the jury would have to retire to their chamber to bring in a verdict, so he delivered part this morning and will conclude this afternoon so that the jury may have from then on to consider the evidence and find a verdict based upon it.

The court room was filled to capacity and there was a fair sprinkling of ladies. Interest was very keen throughout. The prisoner appeared very much composed. During the address of the attorney-general he sat with his knees crossed and his arms folded and kept his piercing dark eyes riveted on the speaker. He was frowning slightly but other than that gave no sign of the effect the wall of incriminating evidence the attorney-general was attempting to build about him was having upon him. When court adjourned at one o'clock he leaned over the dock and asked a newspaper man for a cigarette, which he received with a broad smile and profuse thanks.

During the delivery of the judge's charge, Rev. R. G. Fulton, pastor of Centenary church, occupied a seat beside the chief justice.

The Attorney-General.
In opening his address, Hon. Mr. Byrne resumed where he left off last night when court adjourned.

Regarding the question as to why Luther Smith had not come forward before with his evidence, he said that it was natural that a man should hesitate to take the stand and give evidence which might send a man to the gallows. It was a very different thing to give evidence on behalf of the prisoner.

As to why the crown had not produced the khaki riding breeches and other clothes the murderer was said to have worn, the attorney-general asked what it was probable that Paris would do with the clothes. Link by link he built up the chain of circumstances which the crown maintained connected the accused with the crime.

He said the crown had offered the jury fewer than six witnesses, who knew Paris and who said they had seen him on the morning of August 3. There was no evidence, he said, to show that Paris had been at the British fish shed fire. There had been a far more burning question in his mind, "Did I cover up that kid? Will they find her?" Referring to the mark on Paris' arm which the accused said was a bull, he said it was for the jury to say what the child would be most likely to do while being choked and strangled. They could draw their own conclusions as to the mark and its cause.

Speaking with reference to the accused's counsel's argument that there was not sufficient funds, he asked why those witnesses who lived in the city were not brought to court. There was no expense entailed by that. George Moxon was a druggist in Truro. Surely he had sufficient humanity to come forward even in the absence of paltry witnesses.

As to Walter Humphrey he said he might not be a model citizen but he tried to tell the whole truth, concealing nothing. Why had Paris taken Humphrey into his confidence? Crime made cowards of us all. Going across in the boat he had blurted the story out. Now Paris' counsel was trying to establish that no confidence could be reposed in Humphrey. After Paris had confided in Humphrey he had gone to Truro, in order to establish an alibi. Paris had tried to turn the alibi by saying that on the night of August 3 he had come from Truro to St. John. He had also turned the alibi in connection with the charge of stealing gasoline in Truro. Though Paris had lived in St. John for seven years he swore he did not know where Riverview Park was.

It might be said that Humphrey and John McDonald had conspired to get the reward. This was disproved by the fact that a conversation had taken place between the two and a report made to Detective Power before any reward had been offered. He referred to the conversation between Mr. King of Sagwa and the prisoner and the anxiety of the latter about the size of the rock placed over the child's body.

He asked the jury to contrast the evidence of the crown with that of McDonald, Miss McKendrick, Dr. McCurdy and others for the defense. A new batch of witnesses had been brought forward on the defense for each trial while the crown had been practically the same witnesses from beginning to end and their stories had not varied.

Who was the man who had led the little girls through the wire fence on August 3 to get them bigger berries? The mere production of witnesses did not raise a reasonable doubt, as some maintained. There could be no reasonable doubt that the man who had outraged and violated the child was the man who had led the children through the fence. Who was that man? Hattie Levine had pointed to the accused as the man. It was better to allow Paris to go free than to find him guilty of manslaughter.

In conclusion he said the crown thanked the jurors for the sacrifices they had made in this case. Did they see in the darkness and gloom which surrounded the accused and flash of light that raised a reasonable doubt as to his guilt? The crown did not seek vengeance, for that was the Lord's. The crown asked for justice to the prisoner and also to the murdered child.

The child had been choked and strangled until the spark of life had departed and her body buried like a dog's. The welfare of society and the love the jury bore their little ones demanded that the guilty be punished. The crime was worthy of death. The closing prayer of the crown was that if this man be found guilty that before he might make open and full confession of his horrible and brutal deed.

The Chief Justice.
In opening his charge to the jury, Chief Justice McKeown read the indictment for murder. He told the jury that the evidence given from the witness box at this trial, he asked them to dismiss from their minds any preconceived opinions. He asked them to forget that Paris had been on trial before. This case involved life and death, and this case must be decided on the evidence they had heard.

The prosecution had alleged the guilt of the accused and must prove it. The evidence of the crown would seem to be conclusive if there was nothing to answer it. He reviewed the circumstances of the case as given by the crown. He told them that they (Continued on page 12, fifth column)
