The Resignation of the Ministry.

It was generally considered certain, at the opening of Parliament, that the Government would be sustained, notwithstanding the desertions from their ranks that had been announced, if the Opposition should not produce some tangible testimony in support of their reckless assertions. When the Opposition should not produce the country and in the presence of the country, and in the presence of the country, and in the presence of the world, if the world were listening to commit a breach of falth against every absent member of Parliament. I can say in the presence of the country, and in the presence of the world, if the world were listening to our rather unimportant affairs, that if ever a pledge, if ever a bargain, if ever an agreement or arrangement was made, it was that the House should be prorogued on the 13th day of August. Some of the gentlemen who have spoken, I won't tax my memory as to which of them, have made the constitutional objection that the House should be prorogued on the 13th day of August. Opposition should not produce some tangible testimony in support of their reckless assertions. When the Opposition accepted the report of the Royal Commission as their basis of attack, thereby confessing that their boasts of the Ottawa Citizen, the ablest of the Ottawa Citizen, the ottawa Citizen and the constitution of Canada or what the constitution of Canada o possessing evidence were falsehoods, and when the Government gains at two elections showed that Sir John and his colleagues stood as high as ever in the popular estimation, the friends of the Ministry were confident of victory. But the Opposition leaders worked with a skill and unscrupulousness learned in a hundred defeats, and by the careful study of Kansas and other tactics, and finally, the Government whip had to report to the Premier ment whip had to report to the Premier of the House and the money of the people by prolonging a useless struggle, the Ministers at once resigned their portfolius.
