

churchyard". Happily they have been translated into excellent English verse. I give their message to you, brave people of Britain, as something to which, I believe, you may look with confidence.

"The time will come, when thou shalt lift thine eyes
To watch a long-drawn battle in the skies,
While aged peasants, too amazed for words,
Stare at the flying fleets of wond'rous birds.
England, so long the mistress of the sea,
Where winds and waves confess her sovereignty,
Her ancient triumphs yet on high shall bear,
And reign, the sovereign of the conquered air."

In the last great war, the national pride of Canada was fired by the exploits of the Canadian Corps. When the present war came, we set about creating a new army which we were determined would rival the old. Canada's new army, I think I may say, is as well known in many parts of Britain as it is in Canada. Since my arrival, I have been proud to hear on all sides, that the Canadian Corps under General McNaughton's command, is as fine as any military unit in Britain.

In addition to the ^{two operational} divisions in the Corps, there are in this country many thousands of Canadian troops including a tank brigade and an infantry division which have recently arrived.
