GOLD-HEADED CANE LATEST MYSTERY

New York, Sept. 25.-The whereabouts of a goldheaded cane, supposed to have belonged to Correspondent James F. J. Archibald, is to-day the latest puzzle in the letter-carrying episode which resulted in Austrian Ambassador Dumba's recall. Five treasury officials came from Washington to New York to ask Archibald regarding the can, is admitted to-day. He said he had never had one.

Persistent declarations have been made in the investigation of the case of the correspondent who carried the letters from the Austrian ambassador to Vienna, that Archibald carried the most important documents in a hollow cane. The cane was said to be weighted so it would readily sink. It is also intimated that had the papers in the cane been found, Germans Ambassador Bernstorff would have been

Archibald, who arrived yesterday in the Rotterdam, said he did not believe Dumba intended to implicate him in any trouble. Archibald also carried letters and gifts from Ambassador Bernstorif to Mrs. Bernstorff and from Prince Von Hatzfeldt to his wife. The letters were confiscated in England, although the gifts were allowed to go through. Chief Flynn, of the United States secret service, met Archibald at quarantine yesterday. "He asked me," said Archibald to-day, "if before I left I had been given for my own personal use, or to present to some person, a gold-headed can that might have been hollow and useful for the concealment of papers. I assured him I did not know anything about such Capt. Wm. Goddard and crew who were lost coming from Oporto on board the schooner Checkers, 1913.

At last the family tie is broken, And our loved ones they are gone. Gone from us, yes gone forever Into that world to us unknown.

Twas in the lovely autumn month, The Checkers sailed away. Captain and son, four other men, With spirits light and gay.

Alas! How little did we think That when we said good bye To loved ones dear it was the last, Ah! Yes, the last good bye.

We'll never see them any more, Nor from them did we hear, But in the storms that raged that Fall They all were lost, we fear.

Oh, how we watched for their return, As we had often done, And strained our eager eyes in vain For them that did not come.

The Captain had an aged mother, And a loving wife to mourn, A loving son and daughter Who waited his return.

Sadly, we waited and we prayed, With tearful eyes and beating heart. We scanned the waters o'er and o'er And sought for news from every

President Wilson Honored At English Royal Table

New York, Sept. 22-King George proposed the health of President Wilson in a toast at a banquet given in Windsor Castle on the night of Sept 4, according to mail dispatches printed by the New York Sun to-day. The British censor, the Sun said, held up a cablegram reporting the incident, but a letter containing a copy of the cablegram reached New York.

His Majesty's Speech. A number of American women attended the banquet, the Sun said, The king was quoted as making the following speech:

"It will, I think, be an everlasting testimony to the wisdom and good sense of the American people that in most trying and difficult circumstances, well nigh impossible to conceive, they stood loyally united behind President Wilson. Mr. Wilson's action throughout the period of difficulty had justified the faith and confidence of the American people."

This is the first occasion, the Sun correspondent added that the health of a president of the United States has been proposed at the British royal table by the sovereign.
