farm and Household. When to Feed Grain to Horses.

Horses are provided with an un usually large development of the salivary glands, and an enormous quantity of saliva is secreted during the eating of a feed of grain or hay. This copious supply of saliva is sufficient to maisten and dilute the food, so that it can be digested perfectly without the help of water. Water is absorbed by the coats of the stomach and enters the blood with such rapidity that a thirsty horse will drink more water than the stomach will contain at one time, and the water begins to pass off through the kidneys, in such a case, after the lapse of a very few minutes. So that, knowing these facts, one may naturally infer that a norse may be watered a few minutes before feeding with more advantage than soon afterward because in the former case the water has been absorbed before the feed is swallowed, and digestion can not be interfered with by the presence of too much water in the stomach, as might happen in the latter case. The best practice is that usually followed, namely, to give the horse very little water on at noon, and in the evening, before gives time for absorption of water Winter Feeding.

The subject of preserving green seem to lead in the agitation. In high prices which rule for corn and other grain. The matter has been for years a source of study, and the inventive genius of the enterprising stock-men of that section has at last resulted in the "silo," an arrangement that fills every requisite of a press and preservingthus cared ter, nlaces feeders in the older portions of the country in a position to successfully compete with Western beef producers, it is claimed that by using this process of preserving food it is possible to fatten cattle to as good advantage upen growing grasses. -Ex.
