DISCORDANT. BY FRANK BAKER. If I could always feel that God were near, As I do often when the day is done...

A Victim to the Seal of Confession. A True Story, by Rev. Joseph Spillman, S. J.

CHAPTER II. (Continued) Passing through the church, lighted only by the flickering rays of the lamp suspended before the tabernacle, the boy entered the sacristy.

CHAPTER IV. Loser reached the "Four Ways" inn soon after the children, and stood while Charles, with frequent interruptions on Julia's part, gave his friend the baker's reasons why his grandmother was remaining for the night in the convent, whilst he and his sister were to return to Aix.

"Why?" Charles said, "Uncle has a whole lot of money in his desk." "You know we were to say nothing about that," interposed Julia sharply.

"Why not?" her brother retorted. "Mr. Lenoir is not a thief." "That is certainly an act," the baker interrupted. "But make haste and jump up, it is already late. You shall sit on one side of me in the front seat, and we shall see how fast my good horse can run. Yes, I understand now why your grandmother sends you off alone."

"How came you by that seal across your face?" inquired the baker, who did not much like the look of the man. "I have to thank an accursed Prussian Hussar for that, in the course of the late war," was the answer.

"Up with you then, Sir, you must sit here by me and tell me the whole story. Make room for the gentleman, Charles, all honours to the brave defenders of our country!"

soliloquy-d. If some unprincipled man knew that I was all alone in this lonely house, with all this money in my charge—well, I had better not think too much about what might happen!"

Slowly pacing up and down the sitting room, the old lady recited the rosary for the holy souls, whilst the shades of twilight deepened into night. She did not light a candle, but laid down without undressing on the bed, thinking she would keep awake until her son returned.

children down at their mother's door, and went home quite elated to repeat to his wife the wonderful deeds of the brave veteran with the scar of the sabre-cut.

Meanwhile Loser provided himself at the station with a flask of brandy and some sandwiches which he put into his pocket, and then pacing about the waiting room, he made himself as conspicuous as possible, asking one railway official after another about his ticket and the time of the train, until one of the porters told him that if he could not wait like other people, he had better have a special train put on for him.

vicious habits. Finally to elude his creditors, he had basely enlisted; and the rough life of a soldier had drawn him deeper into the abyss of social degradation and moral turpitude.

And after the war as we have seen, he had gone from one situation to another, losing each in turn through his unprincipled conduct, until, for the sake of a living, he had accepted the post of sacristain in a village church. Now he was on the eve of committing an actual crime, and the memory of his mother rose up before him like a warning angel to deter him from it.
