Prince of Wales.

WILL VISIT ANCIENT JAPANESE CITY.

TOKIO, Apr. 19. (Associated Press.)—Nara, one of the ancient Japanese cities which the Prince of Wales will visit on his tour of Japan as guest of the government, is a classic center of Shinto worship, and was the first capital of the nation. Much of the building and beautifying began in A.D. 709, the "Golden Age of Japan," and is still intact. The great Kasuga Park conveys the impression of an English manor with its lordly pines and graceful cryptomerias, interspersed with ancient cherry trees and rows of maples, beneath whose shade hundreds of deer may be seen at all seasons. During the time of the Tokugawa Shogunate, the killing of one of these deer was punishable by death, and while no such penalty is meted out today, any injury to these animals is severely dealt with. The deer seem to know it and make friendly advances to all visitors. During the early days of Nara prosperity, the Todaiji, one of the seven great temples, was the head of Buddhism in Japan and the buildings covered some 20 acres. It was richly endowed with a domain of 5,000 persons who labored in its service.

GLORIES HAVE DEPARTED.

Of all its glories there to-day remain but few, chief among them being the Great South Gate, Nandai Mon; the great Fall of Buddha and the ancient and most interesting old shrine called Kaidan-in. The Great Gate was built in 752 A.D. and remodelled in 1190. On either side are two gigantic figures of Niō or the Deva Kings carved by Tanket and his pupil Unkei. With the two stone lions close by, excellent specimens of 12th century Chinese sculpture but grotesque to modern eyes, they are listed and protected as "National Treasures." The Nara-no-Daitokuji, the vast bronze Buddha seated in 749 A.D., is the largest of the kind in Japan, if not in the world, being 63½ feet in height. The Kaidan-in is remarkable for its unusual construction and arrangement inside—a series of platforms rising one above the other
