THE COMPENSATION.

"There is always a compensation," says Emerson.

If you gain one thing you lose another, if you lose one thing you gain another.

There are times when one doubts this law of compensation, and other times when the truth of it flashes across some commonplace situation and lights it up.

I thought of this law last night when we were talking about a married couple whom we have recently met.

Still As Easy As A Lover.

I don't mean that he is silly about it, he is just unusually attached to her. He always calls her up once or twice a day from the office; when he gets back to his house at night he hurries up the steps as eagerly as any young lover and is as disappointed if his wife happens to be out. When he is in a room and his wife comes in, his face lights up in a way that is beautiful to see.

And who is the lady who excites all this devotion? Is she extraordinarily beautiful or fascinating? No, I do not think her best friends would say that. She is a pleasant faced, cheerful little woman, a good homemaker and a pleasant companion, tactful and gracious, a perfect mistress of her "maitre de femme," as Stevenson puts it.

Why then this exceptional devotion? Well, here is an explanation which the Man Who Thinks advances. You may not like it, and again you may find it one of those light flashes that make obscure things clearer.

A Refuge From The World.

It is not because the woman is exceptional that she means so much to her husband but because she is a refuge from a world that has been harsh to him. He is one of those men who, starting out with brilliant prospects and with good opportunities, has somehow failed to fulfill that promise. Either he is lacking in some quality necessary to success or he has been peculiarly unlucky. Now his wife is tactful and gracious. She undoubtedly makes for him an atmosphere in which he can recover the stature that 'ho seems to himself to have lost before the world.

The Man Who Thinks says this is not an unusual case. He says that he has noticed many times that the less successful men, as the world rates success, are often the most devoted and dependent husbands.

The woman of whom I write has to work pretty hard and does not have as many pretties as some of her friends whose husbands have been more successful in a worldly way. But I fancy some of them would exchange their pretties and their leisure for what she has.

The Successful Man's Love Critical.

When a man is successful he is very much inclined to grow more arrogant, more self-sufficient, more self-satisfied and more critical of others. His wife included. He's giving her a great deal, he says to himself. Is he getting all he should in return?

Furthermore, the successful man is frequently the target of clever women who are eager to draw his attention to themselves by flattery and by charm.

The wife of the unsuccessful man is not likely to have such rivals.

There is always a compensation. If you gain one thing you lose another. If you lose one thing you gain another.

Horn Glasses an Atrocity

SAYS BRITISH EYE EXPERT.

LONDON, June 26.—Clement Jeffery, an eminent eye diagnostician, does not like the vogue which is fast gaining ground here of wearing horn-rimmed spectacles. Lecturing on "The nation's eyes," in London recently, he said that the wearing of horn-rimmed spectacles by adults was an atrocity.

Mr. Jeffery added that the chief cause of myopia was not near work as is generally supposed, but mental strain. If all lessons could be made interesting and teachers and parents were paragons of love and patience, then myopia would be wiped out of the nation's defects.

Just Folks.

By EDGAR A GUEST

THE FEW.

The many travel the well-paved way. Content with the common lot. But the few break out from the crowd about

And go where the throng will not.

The few stand to the hazard of risk. And bend to the dreary load. The few will try for the hill tops high And carve for themselves a road.

The many wait till the path be known And the way shines smooth and clear. But the few will turn with the will to learn

To fight with the thing called fear. The many will never desert the old Or fashion a pathway new. For the man who leads to the greater deeds Comes always out of the few.

The many will sit at their ease by night. Content with joys they see. But the few are thrilled by the urge to build

The greater joys to be.

His Mother's Spirit

A little boy, six years of age, recently ran away from his home at Aversa—about twelve miles from Naples—to escape from his stepmother, who ill-treated him. Having searched for him in vain, his father informed the police. Soon Pasqualino was discovered at Naples with his grandmother. The latter told how, a few days before, she had heard a knocking at the door, and, on opening it, she had seen, to her astonishment, her small grandson standing there alone.

"Who brought you here?" she asked. "A woman," answered Pasqualino. "What woman?"

"I don't know," said the child; who then told his grandmother that he had run away because his stepmother beat him, but had got frightened, not knowing where to go. While he was wandering about the streets of Aversa a woman came up to him and took him by the hand. Without speaking, she lifted him on to the electric tram that runs between Aversa and Naples, holding him closely to her all the way. At Naples she led him to his grandmother's house, knocked, gave him a kiss, and left him.

"Had you never seen her before?" asked the wondering grandmother. "Never, but she was like that," said the boy, pointing to a photograph of his own mother that stood on the table. His mother had died when he was only a few months old.

270 Miles an Hour

A world's record air speed of 270 miles an hour is expected in the impending trials of a new British racing aeroplane which will represent this country in the international contest for the Beaumont Cup on June 22nd, at Istres, France.

Mr. H. P. Pollard, who planned the famous aerial Derby winning Bamel, also designed this new machine, which is driven by a special Napier engine, and has incorporated in it a number of secret devices for lessening head resistance and increasing speed which will, it is calculated, make it miles an hour faster than even the swiftest of the racers produced so far by France or America.

Preserved by Burning

A flame-throwing device which was designed by Germany and used during the war is now being successfully utilized in New York States as a means of protecting electric light and telephone poles from decay in the earth.

The pole before being set up is treated with the flame-thrower until a charcoal surface is formed. Creosote, which hitherto has been used alone, is then applied. This system of treating the poles, it is stated, lengthens their lives considerably.
