Fads and Fashions

The antique effect is favored in jewelry. Huge imitation stones are set in "antique" settings.

Very smart is the long sleeve which is tight at the cuff. Even the fur coats have adapted it.

Heading the list of fall neck-scarves in silver fox, which is seen in both large and medium skins.

Clocks are used in fine chiffon hostessery—mandarin being one of the smartest shades for afternoon.

Delightful travelling costumes are made of woolsens in all-over patterns—perhaps in a chevron design.

Both coats and frocks are generally close fitting above the waist, with any fullness coming below. Sleeves are almost invariably long, with novel cuffs, puffs or trimming.

"A Miracle"

DEVOUT CRY AS VIRGIN AND CHILD SHOW ON CHURCH WALL.

Picture Human Hand Never Painted Thronged to Tiny Whitewashed Chapel of St. Martin's, at Central Park, L. I.

St. Martin's Roman Catholic Church in Central Park, L. I., a small, poverty-stricken, white-washed structure built only last year, has become a center of veneration for thousands. More persons visited it yesterday than live in the entire community in which it stands.

A dim but easily discernible picture of the Madonna and Child, has appeared on the rough, unfinished plaster of the interior wall of the church. Hundreds of pilgrims who visit the edifice regard the somber shadow on the wall as a manifestation of divine favor. Scores have brought ill or crippled members of their families with them to gaze at this picture, which no man painted, in the hope of a miraculous cure.

It was about five weeks ago that the apparition was called to the attention of the Rev. Daniel H. Dwyer, rector of the church. A parishioner who had been attending forty-hour devotion services pointed out to him that the figures of Mary and Her Child were visible in a transept on the right side of the church.

Whether there was a stain on the plaster before, which only recently has assumed the form it now has, is something which neither Father Dwyer nor any of his parishioners are able to say. All of them had stared at the wall, perhaps for hours in the aggregate, without noticing anything beyond its rough finish and the stained glass window depicting the Resurrection.

Then suddenly, when it was pointed out to them, they saw, just beneath the window, the brooding figure of the Mother and Her Child. Hundreds are positive that it had not been there before five weeks ago. It is inconceivable to them that it could have been there and escaped their notice. Father Dwyer is non-committal.

"My attitude is neutral," he said last night. "I like to think the best I can about it."

A member of the board of trustees of the church, who prefers to remain anonymous, is of the opinion that the shadow itself is of natural origin, but that the shape it assumed is not to be explained by human mentalities. The stain on the wall, he thinks, may date from the building of the church last year.

Before the roof was on the structure, he said, there was a severe storm and part of the south wall, just above where the picture appeared, collapsed, permitting the rain to beat down into the concrete. His theory is that the concrete had not dried thoroughly when the plaster was applied to the inside wall and the moisture, gradually oozing thru the rough plaster, formed a stain on the inside wall.

"But how it has formed itself into such an unmistakable likeness of the Madonna and the Christ Child is a mystery to me," he said.

Father Dwyer is skeptical of this explanation. It fails to satisfy him. He intimated that he would conduct an investigation, in all reverence, with a view of discovering whether any explanation of the picture was humanly possible.

The church stands in a quiet, residential part of Central Park. It has about 300 parishioners, many of them living outside the limits of the village, which has only a few hundred inhabitants.

Every day for weeks hundreds of persons have visited the edifice, many of them coming long distances. At daybreak yesterday, as on the day before and on preceding days, people were waiting patiently beneath the trees for the doors to be opened that they might look upon the miracle. Two hundred motor cars stopped at the church yesterday. The sexton arises at 6 a.m. to open the doors for the visitors, but declines to remain on duty through the evening, so the apparition is to be seen only by daylight.

Situated as it is just beneath a stained-glass window, there is no possibility, it is said, that the picture is formed by light passing through one of the windows of the church. There is no tint of color in it. It is a work of shadows, yet it remains vaguely distinct from whatever angle it is viewed and no matter from what quarter the light is cut off.

Some declare that it has become more distinct since first it was observed, that halos now are apparent which were not visible before and that a cross above the head of the Child is now visible where no cross was five weeks ago—New York Herald and Tribune, Oct. 17th.
