CHAPTER XXII.

A FOUL DEED—THE MISSING ONE.

And now the silent, solemn solitary night reigned over the scene, and no voice broke the stillness to tell of the crime which had been done. The great hush of peace and quiet was universal, and nowhere deeper and more profound than round the shaft of the old mine, down which poor George had been so ruthlessly thrown. After that one last despairing cry all had become still—terribly still, and the stillness remained undisturbed. Nothing but the broken bars of the wooden protection, and a trampled tuft of grass here and there, gave indication of the deadly struggle—the fearful tragedy—the cruel murder—that the spot had witnessed. Gently as ever the low night-breeze rustled along the ground and stirred the branches over head, sweetly and calmly as ever the stars twinkled in the vault of blue, so supremely indifferent is Nature in her magnificent life and motion to the sins and sufferings, the crimes and wrongs, which human wickedness inflicts and human innocence endures. Surely oh, surely, behind that veil of earth and sky, which neither shudders nor trembles when the most horrible crimes are perpetrated, there is a sleepless eye beholding, and marking, and reserving all things for a day of accounting. Nothing but this thought can reconcile us to the majestic apathy of the universe in presence of the foulest deeds and crimes. But for such faith, the hush of silence resting this night on the woods and fields of Ardgowan would be a sad and hopeless mystery.

The Horse Epidemic

The following letter from Mr. D. McEachran, V. S., to the Council of Agriculture, Province of Quebec, may prove useful to those with affected horses:—

Keep them in the stalls; keep the stable warm. 66° to 68°; clothe the body and bandage the legs; give them whatever they will eat.

When the ears and legs become cold, with the pulse weak and the breathing quick, rub the sides well with ammonia liniment, and give two fluid ounces of ammonia acetatis, with half an ounce of spirits of nitrous ether, in a bottle of gruel four times a day; give also a quart of good old beer three times during the twenty-four hours, with as much gruel or linseed tea as can be drenched into them, if they don't drink.

On no account let them get chilled, either by being taken out, or the doors being left open; but see also that the stable is kept perfectly clean, all manure immediately removed, and the floors well dusted with carbolis powder.

And may I add to the owners—if you wish to save the lives of your horses, do not force the poor staggering animals to work. Even if they do not drop dead on the streets, as many have done, and supposing even they do not die from the disease, the injury done to the lungs and system generally will render them almost worthless. Old horses more especially seem to suffer from the congested condition of the lungs and weakened circulation, and require all care possible.

Grief, excessive anxiety, or prolonged study will produce infirmity in the nervous system, in proportion as the strength of that system is expended upon the mind in troubled thought, so are the organs of digestion, assimilation and nutrition, rendered inactive and sluggish in proportion as the system becomes infirm. Every individual has some one organ weaker than the rest, and this is always the first to suffer during nervous prostration; for example, afflicting news sometimes causes total suspension of the muscular action of the heart, when the patient is debilitated, producing sudden hemorrhage and death. No doubt any longer remains of the practicability of restoring the nervous system, and through the nerves the muscles of the injured organs. Feltz's Compound Syrup of Hypophosphites has been proved to possess such power in numerous instances. It will impart strength to overcome trouble and affliction. Persons who are accustomed to look upon the dark side, and who see no pleasure in living, on using this Syrup soon learn to value and enjoy life, and those who study deeply or through long hours, will find in the Syrup a promoter of the power of endurance in the brain.

To better evidence of the progress of the market can be added, than the fact that there has, or will be, opened out this fall in the vicinity of the market about twelve or fourteen new stores, and two or three new foundries in other parts of the town.
