However, he proceeded to execute his ommission. This he put in the form of a sommission. This he put in the form of a table request from Owen to Manston, that anston would come to the Southampton form and wait for Owen's arrival, as he ned his reputation. The message was veted as the rector suggested, Edward ranteeing to the clerk who sent it off t every expense connected with the che should be paid. A conviction suddenly breke in upon Edvard's mish; then a wish overwhelmed him. The conviction—as startling as it was sudden—was that Manston was a villain, who it some satiler time had discovered that his wife lived, and had bribed her to keep out of sight, that he might possess Cytherea. The wish was—to proceed at once by this very grain that was starting, find Manston before he would expect from the words of the telegram (if he got if), that any one from Carriford could be with him—charge him boldly with the crime, and trust to his consequent confusion (if he were guilty), for the solution of the extraordinary riddle, and the realease of Cytherea.

The ticket office had been locked up at the expiration of the time at which the train was due. Rushing out as the guard blew his whistle, Edward opened the door of a carriage and leaped in. The train moved along and he was soon out of sight.

Springrove had long since passed that peculiar line which lies across the course of falling in love—if, indeed, it may not be called the initial itself of the complete passion—a longing to cherish; when the woman is shifted in a man's mind from the region of mere admiration to the region of warm followship. At this sasumption of her nature, she changes to him in tone, hue, and expression. All about the loved one that said "She," before says "We" now. Eyes that were to be subdued become eyes to be feared for; a brain that was to be grobed by cynicism becomes a brain that is to be tenderly assisted; leet that are to be tested in the dance become feet that are not to be distressed; the once-criticised accent, manner, and dress, become the client of a special pleader.

Now that he is fairly on the track, and Good News For Those Afflicted With Rev. Jacob Iler, of Cottam, Essex county, writes: "J. W. Kern: Dear sir,—For several months I was severely afflicted with sciation rheumatism. In Decomber last inflammatory rheumatism set in. My family doctor failed to cure me. I tried various remedies, also Calery Compound and Pride of the Valley, with no benefit. I sent to Essex Center for another highly advertised medicine, siso to Kingaville, but could get none. My friend, Mr. James Doan, druggist, of Kingaville, sent me a bottle of Kern's Rheumatic Cure, which vexed me, and caused me to say to my family this preparation is from some irresponsible person of whom we have no knowledge, and if his cure is good why is it not extensively known. I did believe it to be one of those many hundreds of worthless preparations that flood the market these days. After some days I concluded to try the stuff. It can't prove more worthless than the drugs! have been taking. But, sir. I had not taken.

§ 8. Five to eight o'clock, p.m.

Now that he is fairly on the track, and ad begun to cool down, Edward remembered that he had nothing to show—no legal authority whatever to question Man-ston, or interfere between him and Cythe-rea as husband and wife. He now saw the can't prove more worthless than the drugs I have been taking. But, sir, I had not taken more than half a dozen doses of it before wisdom of the rector in obtaining a signed confession from the porter. The document would not be a deathbed confession—perthe pain was entirely removed. That was several months ago, and I have felt nothing of them since. I must pronounce your preparation—Kern's invaluable Rheumatic Cure. In conclusion, I will say I think it concession from the porter. The document would not be a deathed confession—perhape not worth anything legally—but it would be held by Owen, and he alone, as Cytherea's natural guardian, could separate them on the mere ground of an unproved probability, or what might perhaps be called the ballucination of an idiot. Edward himself, however, was as firmly convinced as the rector had been of the truth of the man's story, and paced backward and forwards the solitary compartment as the train wound through the dark heathery plains, the mazy woods, and meaning coppices, as resolved as ever to pounce on Manston, and charge him with the crime during the critical interval between the reception of the telegram and the hour at which Owen's train would arrive—trusting to circumstances for what he should say and do afterwards, but making up his mind to be a ready second to Owen in any emergency that might arise.
