THE YAWNING GRAVE ROBBED OF ITS PREY!

A Condition That Seemed Desperate and Hopeless!

Truth is Mighty and Must Prevail!

A Lady's Tale of Suffering!

The thriving and flourishing town of Paris, Ont., now an important manufacturing centre, is at present considerably agitated concerning a most remarkable cure recently effected. The lady, who was matched from the brink of the yawning grave, is well known, and the truthfulness of her statements vouched for by the pastor of her church.

In connection with this wonderful event, we may remark that this lady is a member of the most respectable family in the town, and her husband is a well-to-do merchant. The lady, who was matched from the brink of the yawning grave, is well known, and the truthfulness of her statements vouched for by the pastor of her church.

The facts of this remarkable cure are too interesting to the general public to be lightly passed over, and we consider it advisable, in the interest of the weaker sex, who naturally suffer more than men, to give a few of the salient points in connection with this wonderful escape from suffering and death, in the hope that others may be directed to the same trials and vicissitudes, or draw so near to some miraculous shining of a light.

Mrs. Elizabeth Ann Kitchen, the subject of this article, is a lady of great intelligence and good education, and one of the few women in the town who are well-to-do. She is a member of the most respectable family in the town, and her husband is a well-to-do merchant. The lady, who was matched from the brink of the yawning grave, is well known, and the truthfulness of her statements vouched for by the pastor of her church.

Mrs. Kitchen's case was considered by all of the most extraordinary, most baffling and most desperate ever submitted to the notice of physicians. She was apparently beyond all human aid, and the insatiable grave seemed to show a longing, an intense desire to receive her into its cold bosom. Indeed, so great were her sufferings at times that she would lie on her back, and in her calm moments she often wished for death, as a means of release from suffering.

The guiding hand that had led Mrs. Kitchen through her sorrow's maze long years ago was still within her, and gave to her the power to resist the temptation to enter the insatiable grave. She was a member of the most respectable family in the town, and her husband is a well-to-do merchant. The lady, who was matched from the brink of the yawning grave, is well known, and the truthfulness of her statements vouched for by the pastor of her church.

Life-giving fountain, she had been told, and she had been told that she would be cured. She was a member of the most respectable family in the town, and her husband is a well-to-do merchant. The lady, who was matched from the brink of the yawning grave, is well known, and the truthfulness of her statements vouched for by the pastor of her church.

She says: "I have been a sufferer for 23 years from Neuritis in the head in its worst form, and for 12 years have suffered from the same disease in the back. My sufferings date back to the time my first child was born, 24 years ago. I do not know what agony I suffered in those long years; they are impossible to describe, more especially since I came to Canada in 1878. I could not walk across the floor, and for years I could not walk from my house to town and back, less than a mile. When I stood on my feet I felt as if I were walking on a bed of nails. I was a member of the most respectable family in the town, and her husband is a well-to-do merchant. The lady, who was matched from the brink of the yawning grave, is well known, and the truthfulness of her statements vouched for by the pastor of her church.

These very severe attacks would come on every day, and the sufferings were so great that I often wished for death. I was a member of the most respectable family in the town, and her husband is a well-to-do merchant. The lady, who was matched from the brink of the yawning grave, is well known, and the truthfulness of her statements vouched for by the pastor of her church.

At this time I became so frantic that I had to be put in a hospital. I was a member of the most respectable family in the town, and her husband is a well-to-do merchant.
