THE MYSTERIOUS VISITOR; OR, WHAT'S HIS LITTLE GAME?

through the shutters now, as I write, it seems to show the outlines of the branch which was always beckoning me to rise and be doing, and tells the same story of peace in nature, peace with God, and goodwill toward man: Looking back towards childhood it is the green branch of love, the laurel wreath of early ambition, and the keepsake of childhood. I'm not going to die till I have to, but when death downs me, I want the trees to look into my window and say farewell. I want the trees to bend over my grave and drop their golden autumn tears on my last resting-place; they won't forget; when old friends are merry again, and when eyes which once looked at me with love have dried their tears and—perhaps, learned to look with love on those we knew not; still the trees will sing requiems over the staid tombstone and the grass-grown grave, and when winter comes they will cover the little mound with leaves and fight the storms for the defenceless dead."

Editors with large families to provide for, and a bulldog in the cellar to keep creditors away, are not half so anxious for renown as they are for past due subscriptions.
