

AT NIGHT

If thou mightst see the silver light
Low lying on the ground,
The deep, the dark, the silent night
With white moths stirring round ;
The pale rose bathing in the dew
As thick as fallen rain,
And knew the skies embroidered blue
Thou wouldst return again.