RECENT PRESS NOTICES.

The Ottawa Citizen, November 8, 1899:

"Not for some time have the music-lovers of Ottawa been treated to a more inspiriting and satisfying recital than was offered by Mr. Henry S. Saunders, the violoncellist, at Orme's hall yesterday afternoon. Mr. Saunders played eight numbers, with rare skill, his interpretation in each instance being marked by refinement of conception, smoothness of execution and superb beauty of tone."

The Halifax Morning Chronicle, November 14, 1899

"Watkin Mills is a host in himself, but he is assisted in these recitals by Mr. Henry S. Saunders, violoncellist, whose reception last night was scarcely less enthusiastic than that of the great artist himself. Mr. Saunders played with delicacy and sentiment, displaying thorough technique and musical feeling. He had three numbers on the programme, and two were encored."

"Mr. Henry S. Saunders contributed much to the pleasure of the evening by his 'cello numbers. He is a master of his instrument, and the more he played the better he was liked."

The Halifax Echo, November 14, 1899:

"Mr. Henry S. Saunders was more than satisfactory as a 'cellist, and won the most enthusiastic applause for his selections. He plays with the feeling and incident of a true nuclein." insight of a true musician.

The Truro Daily News, November 16, 1899:

"Mr. Henry S. Saunders, as violoncellist, was a revelation to many of the music that could be brought out of a 'cello in the hands of a master performer. Mr. Saunders was recalled again and again, and well deserved every encore he received."

The Toronto World, December 2, 1899:

Henry S Saunders is a master of the 'cello, and was given an enthusiastic

The Toronto Mail and Empire, December 2, 1899:

"Mr. Henry S. Saunders is a violoncellist well equipped both in technique and temperament. His numbers included a 'Romance,' by Mr. W. H. Hewlett, of London, which proved a graceful and harmonious composition."

Ottawa Free Press, November 11, 1899:

"The violoncello recital given on Tuesday afternoon by Mr. Henry S. Saunders, under the auspices of the Ottawa Conservatory of Music, was quite an exceptional event. Though the recitel was not planned until the morning previous, the interest attracted by it was sufficient to bring together on a few hours' notice an audience that filled the hall and included very many of the leading patrons of musical art in Ottawa. Mr. Saunders played eight compositions in varied styles, showing himself to be an executant of unusual ability and an artist whose conception of nusic is both poetical and manly. The hearty and unstinted applause of the audience gave evidence of their keen enjoyment of the recital throughout."

St. John N.B. Globe, November 17, 1899:

"Of the 'cellist, Mr. Saunders, nothing but praise was heard, and Poppers' 'Spinning Song,' with its executive enormities, brought down the house."

St. John N.B. Daily Sun, November 17, 1899:

"Mr. Mills was ably assisted by Henry Saunders, whose superb manipulation of the 'cello delighted the audience, who insisted upon encores at his every appearance."

The Quebec Daily Telegraph, November 23, 1899:

"Mr. Henry S. Saunders contributed an instrumental treat by his solos on the violoncello, of which he has so full and perfect a mastery that his performance on it might almost be said to be a vocal one. He is a very clever artist, and one of whom the Dominion may be justly proud."

Ottawa Daily Free Press, November 8, 1899:

"Mr. Saunders' playing of the 'cello was marked by expression and feeling. The fortissimo passages, while having the full volume were entirely devoid of harshness or twang, while the softer measures were sweet and firm."

The Montreal Daily Witness, November 24, 1899:

"The first number on the programme was a 'cello solo, 'Hungarian Dance,' played by Mr. Henry S. Saunders, a most accomplished musician. In this and subsequent numbers his playing gave great pleasure, and was a decided gain to the evening's entertainment."

Toronto Saturday Night, December 9, 1899:

"Mr. R. Watkin Mills was assisted by Mr. Henry S. Saunders, a solo violon-cellist of sterling ability, with a good round tone and excellent technique."

The Kingston Daily Whig, November 29, 1899:

"Henry S. Saunders, violoncellist, made a popular debut here, being encored twice. His technique was good and he added to a thorough knowledge of the instrument, deep feeling and expression."
