GRAY DUSK

By OCTAVUS ROY COHEN. Copyright, 1920.

"What?" inquired the detective casually, "what is Conrad Heston's real name?"

Her eyes widened. "Wh—what do you mean?"

"Don't you know that Conrad Heston is not his real name?".

"No . . ."

Carroll suddenly produced the platinum and diamond ring. He held it before her eyes; the brilliant stone flashing in the afternoon sun. "Do you know that ring?"

"I—I—" She moistened her lips. Terror was expressed in every fine feature of her face. "No—no. . . . I don't know it."

"Miss Esther, I can see by your face that you do recognize it. Is it yours?"

"No."

"Good!" You've helped me considerably. Because I knew that it was either yours or Heston's; and since it isn't yours, it must be his."

"Wh-what—where did you find it?"

"In Furness Lodge, and it pretty well implicates Heston with the murder."

She leaped to her feet and stood regally before David Carroll. "It does not implicate him," she cried wildly. "It does not. . . ."

"But—"

"That ring is my ring! Mine. Conrad gave it to me; he gave it to me and I lost it at the lodge!"

CHAPTER XIII.

SILENCE fell upon the group. All eyes were fastened on the figure of the girl, bosom heaving with fierce emotion, eyes dilated with the light of desperation. But with her acknowledgement of ownership of the ring she quieted gradually, as tho the confession was a load removed from her shapely shoulders.

"When did you lose it there, Miss Esther?"

"Several days ago."

"Tell me, Miss Esther, don't you know that Heston is not his real name?"

She shook her head. "I won't lie to you, Mr. Carroll—it's no use now. But I can't answer that question."

"That's tantamount to an admission. We'll let it drop. Where is Heston now?"

"—I—I don't know exactly where he is."

"He is on his way to Karnak, isn't he?"

"I—I—can't say."

You still insist that you were at Furness Lodge a little after 6 o'clock on the afternoon of the 9th?"

"Yes, I was there."

"Alone?"

"Yes."

"What did you go there for?"

"To hunt for that ring."

"How did you happen to lose it there?"

"My engagement to Heston was a secret, and so I wore the ring around my neck on a ribbon. I lost it several days before that and knew it must have been at the Lodge, because I missed it shortly after leaving there."

"You met no one on your way to the lodge on the 9th?"

"No. That is, no one except Mart Farnam."

"Where was he?"

"Walking toward his cabin. He'd evidently been to Nixon's. He had been drinking."

"Does the road from Nixon's to his cabin pass the lodge?"

"Yes."

"Did Farnam speak to you at all?"

Her face flushed. "Yes."

Carroll eyed her keenly. "You're not very fond of him, are you, Miss Esther?"

"No! I loathe him. I—I—told him so."

"That afternoon?"

"Yes."

"He—he—" Her cheeks became scarlet. "He spoke nastily about Mr. Heston and me, and said I—had disgraced myself."

"And you—?"

"I slapped his face and walked on. He was drunk."

"And you are quite convinced that he didn't know there was any one at the lodge?"

"I am sure. He would have mentioned it if he'd known. Mart always tells what he knows."

"How long were you in the lodge?"

"Only about three minutes. I entered the back veranda and walked thru the dog-trot. By that time I was sure that something was wrong. I left thru the front door and struck right thru the trees to my right toward Mr. Heston's cabin."

"He was there when you got there?"

"Yes. He had just been fishing. He had a string of fish with him."

"He seemed quiet and calm?"

"Yes. Oh! I'm sure, Mr. Carroll, that he'd been nowhere near the lodge."

"He knew that the folks were there, didn't he?"

"Yes—he had known it since the previous day. He says their chauffeur came out with some supplies, and had trouble with his car about a mile from the lodge. Mr. Heston then had time to remove his belongings from the lodge to the cabin before the man arrived there, and he watched from then on."

Carroll rose. "I'm very much obliged, Miss Esther. I'm sorry you found it necessary to mislead me for awhile at the beginning, but I understand now. I hope things will turn out all right."

Gray dusk had fallen over the swamp when they left the cabin.

Carroll ordered the car back to Furness Lodge, and as it rolled into the swamps from the settlement, its powerful headlights piercing the fast-gathering gloom, he settled himself against the deep upholstery.

Once inside the lodge they refreshed themselves, and with Carter's assistance, skirmished about for a meal. The table was set in short order. But scarcely had they settled themselves to gustatory enjoyment when the telephone in the living room jangled insistently; two short rings, followed by two long ones.

Carroll reached the telephone in a few strides and placed the receiver to his ear, where, true to custom, he heard the clicking of other instruments along the general line. "Hello!"

The deep, resonant voice of Sheriff Potter came to his ears. "Hello! That you, Carroll?"

"Yes."

"I've been trying to get you for the last hour. Remember the friend you asked me about?"

"Heston?"

"Yes."

"What about him?"

"He tried to get away from here on the seven o'clock train. I nabbed him and he's in jail, awaiting your orders!"

CHAPTER XIV.

THE first rays of the morning sun found the three men awake and bathing with gusto under the yard pump. A breakfast of eggs, coffee and crackers followed by a few persimmons which the watchful Carter had found, satisfied them, and they set out for Heston's cabin at the bend of the river.

They found it readily enough, padlocked as they had left it the previous afternoon. It was the work of only a moment to pry out the hasp with a tire tool from the automobile, and Carroll and Sullivan stepped inside, the latter throwing back the solid board screens which, bolted from the inside, covered the four windows.

The cabin was excessively neat within. Chintz curtains covered the windows. On a rude centre-table there were a few well-selected books, by authors known to the world of science—Freud, Ellis, Bloch—novels and plays by Turgenev, Anzibashef, Ibsen, Gorky, Maupassant, Dreiser, Hardy. An iron cot was in the far corner, and opposite it a large packing case converted into a kitchen cabinet.

The room betrayed nothing. And finally the two men paused before a well-made trunk in the corner. Without a word, Carroll broke the lock with his sharp-edged tire-tool. The lid flung back, and the tray removed, disclosed an array of tailored, expensive clothing, even to a full evening equipment.

Garment by garment, Carroll removed the clothes from the trunk, piling them neatly that they might be returned without too great disarrangement. It was not until he reached the bottom of the trunk—after discovering that every tailor's tag had been carefully cut from the clothes—that he found anything worth while.

And that was a photograph; a photograph of a very pretty girl which gave evidence of having originally been in a frame from which it had been carefully removed. The photograph was under a blotter sheet in a small leather secretory; evidently put there months or perhaps years before—and forgotten; a case of out of sight, out of mind. But it was not the high forehead, the mass of brown hair, the perfect features of the pretty woman which attracted Carroll. Rather, it was the reverse side. For there, as he exultantly exhibited to Jim Sullivan, was an inscription in the clear, well-formed chirography of a woman.

"To George, with a heartful of love, from—Katherine Carr!"

Sullivan whistled expressively. "Katherine Carr!" he ejaculated. "The initials K. C. on the ring you found!"

"Yes. And the George probably stands for the first of the man's initials: G. R. A. Quite evidently our Heston is named George and was once engaged to a Miss Katherine Carr, of Newark, N. J."

Sullivan looked up in surprise. "What makes you say Newark?"

"The photographer's name," came the prompt answer as Carroll indicated the impression with his forefinger. "Rantoul, Newark, N.J. Obviously no person living within twenty-five or thirty miles of New York would patronize a Newark photographer unless that person was a resident of Newark and believed in fostering home industry."

Sullivan nodded. "Right again. You're becoming your normal self, David. What now?"

Less than two hours later they bumped across the railroad tracks which mark the actual eastern boundary of Karnak, and braked to a stop before the red brick court house.

Carroll stopped by Stanford Forrest's cell just long enough to report progress without going into details. Then he made his way to the cell occupied by Conrad Heston.

Carroll was not surprised at Heston's physical appearance. His foreknowledge of the man had prepared him for just about what he saw: a man of about thirty years of age, well-groomed, clean-shaven, medium height, with light hair and level blue eyes.

"You know who we are?" asked Carroll.

"Yes," bitterly, "friends of Stanford Forrest, determined to free him of a charge of which he is undoubtedly guilty." His tone was low, his enunciation clear, his bearing reserved.

"Not quite, Mr. Heston. We merely want to find the guilty man."

"It is, of course, needless for me to assure you that I am not he."

The detective shrugged. He made his next question as casual as possible, but his narrow-lidded eyes were watching every play of facial expression.

"When did you last see Miss Katherine Carr?"

"Heston's face twitched. He controlled himself with a visible effort. "I do not know of whom you are speaking," he answered in a low voice.

The man was lying and both Carroll and Sullivan knew it. To the latter's surprise, Carroll did not press his point.

"Why have you assumed an alias, Mr. Heston?"

"My name is Conrad Heston."

"Haven't you dropped a 'George' from your name?"

Again that light of startled fear leaped into the eyes of the cornered man. "My name is Conrad Heston."

"Don't you realize," said Carroll with sudden earnestness, "that these lies are involving you deeper and deeper? Can't you see from my questions that I know you are not truthful with me?"

"I will take my chances," came the dogged response. In spite of himself Carroll admired the other's poise.

"Where is your deed to Furness Lodge?"

"You know as well as I do that I never bought it—that I had no right there."

"You knew Furness pretty well, tho, didn't you?"

"No." Again the telltale expression that denoted the lie.

"How long did you know Mary Carmody—Mrs. Forrest?"

"I never set eyes on her in my life."

"At least you will not deny knowing Miss Esther Devarney, will you?"

A long pause: "I guess there'd be no use in denying that."

"And that you are engaged to her."

"I deny that."

"Even after her admission?"

"Listen here, Carroll, I'm not a weakling nor a mental imbecile. I'll not be tricked by third degree methods—"

"Have it your way. I cannot force you to answer my questions. But maybe you might dare to tell me where you and she were at 6 o'clock on the afternoon of the ninth?"

"I was not with her."

"At 6.30 or thereabouts?"

"I don't care to say."

"Well, I know that about that time she was with you at your cabin near the bend of the Santee. I also know that shortly before that time, and just about the hour of dusk when the murder was committed, Esther Devarney was at Furness Lodge."

For one instant Heston stood rigid with horror. Then he leaped across the cell and sank powerful fingers deeply into Carroll's shoulders: "Good God, man, you're not thinking that she killed Mrs. Forrest? You're not suspecting her of that?"

"I take my cue from you, Heston. That is one question I will not answer. But she admits that she was there."

He shook his head. "I don't believe it. I don't believe she told you any such thing."

"Believe what you like. Thus far I have established the fact that she was there just about the time the murder was committed. Are you quite sure you were not with her?"

"I—I don't rack me, Carroll. I'm not going to tell you anything—not a thing."

"Not even why you tried to make a getaway?"

"No."

"Now your real name?"

"It is Conrad Heston."

Carroll rose. "I'm afraid we can't get together, Heston, and I'm sure you're only injuring yourself. Oh! by the way—" he turned suddenly and extended his hand, palm uppermost, toward Heston. In his palm glittered the diamond ring he had found at the Lodge. "When did you lose this?"

Heston swallowed with difficulty. His answer came in a voice harsh and dry: "I—I never lost it. I have never—seen it—before."

Carroll pocketed the ring calmly. "Very good. However, your denial doesn't bother me—you see, Miss Devarney says that you gave her that as an engagement ring, and that she lost it at Furness Lodge!"

That night Jim Sullivan left on the limited for Newark.

The following morning David Carroll closeted himself with Sheriff Potter, with whom he had a long and serious talk, as the result of which the northbound train leaving Karnak at 10 o'clock found Carroll aboard, bound for Columbia; Heston in the personal custody of the gray-eyed sheriff.

Since the realization that Bennet Hemingway, erstwhile rival with Stanford Forrest for the hand of Mary Carmody, has been in Columbia on the day preceding the murder, Carroll had been unable to rid himself of the idea Hemingway was connected in some way with the crime, and he was now taking advantage of Sullivan's absence on another trail to discover Hemingway's whereabouts on the day when Mary had been killed.

CATTLE PRICES ARE A SHADE STRONGER

Lambs Are Up 25c, While Hogs Are Headed Down.

With about 900 cattle on sale at the Union Yards yesterday trade for practically all classes was steady, and probably a shade stronger on all classes. Good butchers were in fair demand, while the good and choice feeders were selling at fairly satisfactory prices.

The springers and milkers are in steady demand for the better class, but the medium and common ones are not selling very well.

The lamb market is stronger, and 25c up, with the top selling at $13.75. Sheep are a shade weaker, while calves are holding steady at the decline.

The hog market has found its level for the next day or two at least, at $12.75 f.o.b., and $14.75 fed and watered. That these prices will hold for Saturday's loading is not very likely, the packers quoting another dollar off these quotations at the end of the week.

The World is not saying definitely that these facts are absolutely correct, but we believe them to be so, and time will tell whether our forecast is right or not.
