WARMLY WELCOMED HOME.

Private Fred A. Kirkpatrick of the first Canadian contingent, son of A. Kirkpatrick, of the Vassie Co., Ltd., arrived home from South Africa via Halifax at a very early hour Saturday morning, and received a very warm greeting. He arrived on the Parisian on Thursday, with Privates Redden and Woodard of the Infantry School and other Canadians. They were delayed in Halifax waiting to be paid off, and only got away on Friday afternoon, reaching here by the night express, due about one o'clock. Notwithstanding the unseasonable hour, a large deputation was on hand to gree Kirkpatrick, and also extend a welcome to the Fredericton lads. About forty or fifty employes of Manchester, Robertson & Allison, with Private Donahue, ex-Mayor Sears and several friends, assembled at the head of King street about midnight, and drove to the depot. The sleigh was handsomely decorated for the occasion. The boys had a long wait, for the train did not arrive until shortly after two o'clock. They whiled the time away, however, with speeches, songs and merriment When the train did arrive, Kirkpatrick was warmly greeted, first by his father and other members of his family, ther by his friends, who carried him triumphantly to the sleigh and drove him to his home on Rockland Road, where he war cheered enthusiastically. Private Donahue was also driven to his home, and the boys then formed in line and escorted Privates Redden and Woodard to the Park hotel, where they are still sojourning. They gave these a warm welcome and enlivened their home-coming with speech and

A SMART LAD.

How a Sackville Boy Saved a Captain From a Watery Grave.

(Sack rille Post.) There is as smart a sixteen-year-old boy in this town as can be found anywhere in the lower provinces. Here is the story upon which we base such a statement:

A few days ago Capt. John Bowser loaded a small schooner at the Sackville wharf with a cargo for John M. Hicks' lumber camp in Albert county. Capt. Cook was in charge of the vessel, and he had with him Harry Mc-Donald, a sixteen-year-old boy, whose father lives in the town. All went well until the vessel got down off Woodpoint. The captain had been stearing and the how was down in the cabin. Getting through with his work, McDonald came up and was very much surprised to find that he was the only person on the vessel; the captain was not to be found. There was a stiff breeze blowing at the time. In a few minutes McDonald discovered an object in the water some distance from the schooner. Something in the appearance of the object gave the boy the idea that it was the captain: that he had fallen overboard in some way, and was in imminent dan-

He therefore lost no great amount of time in lowering a small boat and rowing to the object he saw in the water. It was as he expected, the captain, and he was unconscious. Now the difficulty was to get the body into into the boat. Those who have tried to lift a heavy body of any kind into a small boat will appreciate the young man's situation. He accomplished the task, however, just how he hardly knows himself. By the time the vessel had drifted a considerable distance, but McDonald soon reached her, and got the captain on board. He was not very long in coming to himself, and when McDonald found Cook in possession of his senses, he started for Sackville. He made the journey, seven miles, on foot; saw Capt. Bowser, and together they returned to the scene of the accident with dry clothing for the unfortunate captain. The schoner had grounded, but floated the next tide without any difficulty. The remainder of the voyage was made without further mishaps.
