Principal of McGill College. Montreal, Author of "Acadian Geology, &c.

No subject have of late years more occupied the attention of thinking men than the alleged discrepancies between the Mo-ine and Geological accounts of the origin of the world, and the antagonism of many of the recent theories of the origin of the human race to the account given by the inspired writers.

It affords the Publishers great pie ute to bring under the notice of the public a book on a subject 20 interesting and important by an author wasse abilities are so well known both in Europe and America, and who is as well attend who is a well attend who is a well attend to the first man and the streamst of such topics. They feel convinced that it will at once take a high rank among the public those of the English and American press, and will form a welcome and valuable edition to Christian as well as to scientific literature.

The work will be published early in November. It will contain 520 pages, and will be printed in a bold clear type, in a manner to compare invocable with publications of a similar character in other countries.
