

INGALLS, OF KANSAS.

ing Speech Against Coercion.

In a great mass meeting of friends of Ireland, held at Topeka, Kansas, on the evening of April 12, prominent people were present from all parts of the State.

Mr. President and Fellow-Citizens:—The resolutions that have been just read to your hearing meet with my hearty concurrence.

I am here to-night to follow a course not as a politician, not as an official of the Government, but as a citizen of the world.

I think, Mr. President, that the cause of Ireland is a wide common cause.

But, sir, in another and far wider sense the cause of Ireland is not alone the cause of Kansas or the cause of America.

Mr. President, the experiment that Great Britain is trying to make with Ireland is neither a novelty nor an innovation.

Take down the map of the world, Mr. President, if you please, and turn to that little spot which is designated thereon as the Emerald Isle.

It is a land of more than 2,000 years of history, a land sacred in song; a land surrounded by hospitable seas.

during this long period of time have been the objects of the most atrocious, the most unrelenting, the most unmerciful hatred on the part of their neighbors in Great Britain.

I understand that this question of Home Rule and local self-government on the part of the Irish simply means that this land that was taken from them by force and fraud, by violence, to pay the tardy wages of dishonor.

I am not here for the purpose or with the intention of violating international comity.

Mr. President, the experiment that Great Britain is trying to make with Ireland is neither a novelty nor an innovation.

Take down the map of the world, Mr. President, if you please, and turn to that little spot which is designated thereon as the Emerald Isle.

It is a land of more than 2,000 years of history, a land sacred in song; a land surrounded by hospitable seas.

It is a land of more than 2,000 years of history, a land sacred in song; a land surrounded by hospitable seas.

5,000,000 of men determined to be free can never be enslaved. Dynamite, Mr. President, dynamite is a powerful weapon, but the most potent dynamite lies in the souls of the men.
