The Famous Hymn's New Rendering.

At a recent P.S.A. meeting the speaker suggested to the brothers the following new and witty, but wise, rendering of a well known Band of Hope chorus:

Dare to be a Daniel,
Dare to stand alone,
Dare to pass the public-house
And take your money home.

The Danger of the Drop.

"Come on, Patrick, and take a drop of something."

"I have quit the dropping business, Mike," replied Pat. "I have seen so many good fellows when whisky had the drop on them. They took just a drop from the bottle, and they dropped into the gutter, and then dropped into the grave. No drinker can get a drop on me any more, and if you don't drop him, Mike, he will drop you."

Banish the Bar.

No one can surely in this day be found to defend or even excuse drunkenness. It is a form of intermittent insanity. It enfeebles the body and kills the mind; it turns the husband into a menace, the merely that he may satisfy a by no means noble appetite marks him as either callous or cowardly.

The bar is the place where a man drinks out of the sight of his family. When the European goes to his beer garden or his "cafe" he takes his family with him. He has no fear that he will get drunk, for he does not intend to swallow spirits or to indulge further than a mild thirst may tempt him.

What is the difference? One of the most obvious is the character of the drinking place. The Briton drinks in a bar where he has little comfort and speedily gets tipsy. The German or the Latin sips his light drink slowly in a comfortable garden or hall with music to tempt him to stay and his family about him to keep his potations within limits. We are frankly of the opinion that it would be better if the German and Latin did not drink at all. But we are aware that the community is not a unit on this point.

The demand for the abolition of the bar should not arouse the antagonism of the defenders of the traffic as a respectable trade. The bar has more to do with making it disreputable than any other single detail. It is at the bar that men usually get drunk. It is from the bar that they are spilled out upon the streets in a state to arouse public resentment. The treating system finds its home in the bar-room. A man drinking in his own home does not take more than he wants simply through sociability. A community which has no bars is looked upon as a sober community, though it may have many cellars. This shows in what esteem ordinary people regard the bar. It is the danger sign of the drink traffic—the chief menace to sobriety.

The decent community as a whole would support legislation to "abolish the bar." There is no surer road to popularity for any political party. We can only account for the reluctance of practical politicians to take it up by crediting it to some mysterious influence which paralyzes their usually astute judgments. Politicians are by no means safe guides to the popularity of real fighting issues. They prefer to be "carried to the skies on flowery beds of ease." They like "safe" questions which can antagonise no one.

We do not believe that there is a rural constituency in Canada which could not be swept by the cry "Banish the Bar." Nothing but party feeling could save any candidate who opposed this policy. Party feeling will do much, but, if it can delude parents into allowing a standing temptation to confront their growing boys, the punishment which will follow will no more than fit the crime. No man has a right to abdicate his sacred place on the throne of his own judgment in so vital a matter for the sake of a dozen parties. Barring partizanship, there is nothing in the rural communities to support the bar. The friends of the retail sale of liquor are always found in the cities.

But if we give the towns and cities to the men who support the bar, or are supported by it—we still have victory in our hands if the farmers will prove but true. They can vote this menace to young manhood, this foe of the family, out of existence.

A Question of Inflection.

The masculine and feminine genders of nouns and pronouns often prove a great difficulty with children.

A certain inspector, after eliciting from a class of London boys that the feminine of Jew was Jewess, of Master, Mistress, etc., proceeded to give some rather harder questions.

"What is the feminine of inspector?" he asked, pointing to a ragged little urchin in front.

"It ain't got none," said the lad, thinking, possibly, that the gentleman was laying a trap for him.

"Oh, yes, it has," said the inspector; "lady inspectors are plentiful enough. For instance, I dare say you know there is a lady who inspects the laundry work in the girls' department of this school. Now, what do you call her?"

"Why," answered the lad, "a washer-woman, of course!"
