THE MAKING OF A FAMOUS MEDICINE

How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Is Prepared For

Woman's Use

A visit to the laboratory A here this successful remedy is made impresses even the casual looker-on with the reli-ability, accuracy, skill and cleanliness which attends the making of this great medicine for woman's ills. Over 350,000 pounds of various herbs are used annully and all have to be gathered at the season of the year when their natural juices and medicinal sub-stances are at their best. The most successful solvents are used to extract the medicinal properties from contact with the medicine is storilized and as a final precaution in cleanliness the medicine is pasteurized and sealed in sterile bottles.

In sterile bottles. It is the wonderful combination of roots and herbs, together with the skill and care used in its preparation which has made this famous medicine so successful in the treatment of female ills. The letters from women who have been restored to health by the use of Lydia E. Finkham's Vegetable Com-pound which we are continually pub-lishing attest to its virtue.

But Jack stopped him with gravity. "That can't be. sir," he said. "I should get a good income and lose my self-respect. No, sir, settle something on Mary to secure her, but 1 must work for the rest. To tell you the truth, now that 1 have gone back to the old now that I have gone back to the old ways of working for my bread and cheese, I like it. Give me six months, and I will promise to do something that shall entitle me to come and say that I am at least not quite so unwor-thy in the world's eyes of the rich Miss Pacewell as I am now"

Pacewell, as I am now." "No, no," implored Mr. Montague; "don't be obstinate; don't be obstinate. What do I want with all this money if you will not share it? It lies like a load upon me already, it will grow heavier with time, until I find to heavier table. You and Mary Thind grow neavier with time, until 1 hind it insupportable. You and Mary must share it, or I shall be miserable." Jack laughed, but he was resolute. "No," he said, "I will work and win her. I'll be Queen's Counsel some day, perhaps-who knows? there are come clucious things in the law's lucky. e glorious things in the law's lucky som bag

The law! Confound it!" said Mr. Montague, disappointedly. "Well, if you will stick to it, I tell you what I will do; I'll quarrel with some one every day, get entangled in legal difficulties, and so keep you in constant briefs. Jack laughed.

"All right," he said, "but don't quar-rel with yourself. And now I must go. There are the bells again! How go. There are the bells again. and different they sound to what they did last night. Ah, sir, depend upon it, last night. Ah, sir, depend upon it, unless the music is in your own hearts, all the world's at discord'" So, after little Patite was each day growing stronger Jack was working harder.

Starting afresh, with his old motto, reburnished, that "Honor comes first though money come after," he found the confidence of the attorneys and soon covered his table with briefs. If a case is good, then take it to Mr. Hamilton, said the solicitors, and if he believes in it he is as certain as such things can be to pull it through. Even Mr. Beaumont, who was called a clever lawyer and a promising man, was left behind in the race, and had to own that honesty, which he had al-ways considered as a dreadful drag on the pace, was a wonderful stimulant, and, with that and perseverance in his heart, a man, even a lawyer, was sure o have many golden gu mon mortal. And then, most marked of all there, was Lady Maud. "Good will and peace," said Mr. Montague, "to all," and he had in-vited Lady Pacewell and queenly Maud. Every more, he had sent a card to Mr. Beaumont, and when the ball commenced. Lady Maud sailed like a regal swan to little Pattie, and kissed her, whispering; "Forgive me, for I love you, Pattie.

"Forgive me, for I love you, Pattle. We are cousins, little fairy." And how could Pattle, much less gentle-hearted Mary, do less Lady Maud was forgiven and left to what-ever punishment she should devise for herself. And she quickly devised it, for when Mr. Beaumont entered, she for when Mr. Beaumont entered, she shot a giande and a smalle that soon brought him to her feet. And there he remained until they were married, when, we think, they changed places, and the worldly husband taught the and the worldly wife that there is a necessary ingredient in the composition of happy matrimony which they had omitted, and that is, disinterested love. But Lady Maud and her affairs must not be allowed to cloud our account of the grand ball, as they as-suredly did not throw a shadow over the ball itself.

All were bappy, and, when the grand band clashed out its last galop, Pattie thought the acme of human enjoyment had been reached. "Oh," said Mr. Montague, beaming with smiles of pure felicity, "we have not done yet. There's another party to come yet. Old friends must not be forgotten, Jack, ch?" And so it came to pass, that the grand house was lit up a second time, the grand band clashed and trumpeted, the army of footmen with the magnifi-
