Is blown into a sauctum by

No matter how they dress-

By pretty girls, you know,

The ladjes have to show-

At every party feed;

And other people read.

It was a waeful hour to me

A shabby coat is nothing, if Xon own a printing press ;

The biggest bug will speak to them,

At ladies fairs they're almost hugged

That they may crack up everything

And thus they get a blow-out free,

The reason is, because they write

HOME.

BY JOHN MACRAE WILSON. Can I forget my father's hearth,

My mither by the ingle spinnin'?

Their well pleased look to see the mirth O' a' their bairnies round them rinnia'?

When I frae them and love departed ? was in my mither's e'e-

My father blest me, broken-hearted.

May lie between their hearth and me,

My heart shall be at hame ferever. INDIAN SUMMER.

There come with autumn's brightest days Some visions sweetly tender,

Now gleaming out from golden hues,-Now draped in purple splender,-

Returning broken-hearted,

To wander 'mid the treasures, whence

All brightness has departed.

A parting requiem sighing ;

Once beautiful, now dying.
