1,768 Cats for a Detective.

How would you like to have 1,768 cats of all colours and descriptions sent to your house? This has been the unhappy lot of a private detective of Berlin.

Somewhat with a grudge against the detective had inserted an advertisement over his name offering to buy any quantity of cats at 5s. apiece, the delivery to commence at 5 p.m.

Several hours before dawn sellers came to arrive before the market opened took my position before the door of the house with Persians, sable, black cats, grey cats, white cats. From 8 a.m. onwards the telephone continued ringing from would-be sellers who were more cautious than their fellows, inquiring whether the offer was still open.

At 5 p.m. 1,254 cats were registered. At least later the number mentioned at the beginning was reached by an energetic wholesale cat dealer, who brought a cart with thirty cats in large cases.

Then the detective, who had early forewarned the joke, and quietly established himself in a restaurant opposite, save up counting, and summoned the police to clear the street.

One For The General.

A few years ago, at a Colonial station, a very pompous general was making his annual inspection of a famous Irish regiment. Now, although he bore a great reputation as a martinet, he had seen no active service, and was one of those who judged a soldier's worth by his conduct-sheet.

There was serving in the regiment one Patrick O'Doherty, who had been through three arduous campaigns, and who was the proud possessor of five war medals, including one for distinguished conduct on the field.

The Chemistry of Love.

BY RUTH CAMERON.

To know the sort of person one ought to marry seems to be a very difficult task.

On the other hand, to know the sort of person one's friends ought to marry seems very simple to most people.

Two women were discussing the engagement of one of the young girls in our neighborhood.

"She's the very last person he ought to marry," said the first (queer host often we do marry "the very last person" isn't it?)

"I know," said the other, "he has such a quick, overbearing temper. He needs one of those patient, sweet tempered girls who will put up with him, and Mary isn't a bit that kind."

Now I happen to know Mary pretty well and I also realize that she isn't of the patient Griselda type. And yet I venture to differ, and to think she may be exactly the kind of a girl Sidney needs. Sidney certainly has a quick, overbearing temper. Give him a meek, sweet tempered girl and he will grow more and more overbearing. He will tyrannize over her just as he does over his meek and sweet tempered mother and sister. Give him Mary and he'll be brought up short against her unwillingness to be tyrannized over. And after he has gone bump up against that blank wall a few times he will probably begin to learn to control himself and respect the rights of others.

Now won't that be better for him than to gradually develop, for lack of opposition, into a household tyrant?

The inner-development of character by marriage is a very wonderful thing. One of the reasons why it is so difficult to say what any two characters will make of marriage is that they will not remain the same after marriage but will act and react into two entirely different characters. And the chemistry of love is not yet a sufficiently exact science to predict what the reaction will produce.

When a serious man and a frivolous woman marry, people are always sure to say that the match will be a failure. And yet I know of one case of the kind in which the woman's frivolity was toned down and the man's seriousness was toned up by the reaction of characters, and the marriage was a signal success.

Again, some years ago when two extremely reckless and imprudent young people were married, everyone who knew them held up their hands and said, "What will become of them, they are both so heedless!" What happened was that the man's recklessness developed caution in the woman and they are now a fairly well balanced couple.

And so it goes.

Marriage is a strange and wonderful melting pot and until exact science, we might as well decide that it is almost as hard to pick the right person for our friends as for ourselves.

Household Notes

After peeling onions, the unpleasant odor may be removed from the hands by rubbing plain table salt over them, then washing in the usual manner.

Eggs for meringues should be thoroughly chilled and beaten with silver fork. Flavoring extracts should be added, if possible, when the mixture is cold.

The objectionable sputtering and flying of hot fat when eggs are dropped into it may be prevented if a little flour is sifted into the fat just before they are added.

The new broom will last much longer if the strands are tied loosely together, put into a pail of boiling water and soaked for two hours. Dry thoroughly before using.

When you wish to take a cake from the pan, turn the pan upside down when you take it out of the oven and lay a wet cloth over it. The cake will drop out easily.

Children are good when the feet are soft, the skin smooth and the cartilage at the end of the breathless soft. Abundance of pinfeathers always indicates a young bird.

Pure cider vinegar applied to the hands after they have been in dish-water or the scrubbing-pail will counteract the ill effects of the lye and make the hands comfortable and soft.

Before a beefsteak is broiled it should be wiped with a cloth wrung out of cold water and all the superfluous fat should be trimmed off. Grease the broiler with some of this fat.

It is worth remembering that a sauce of average thickness is made by allowing two tablespoons each of butter and flour to one cup of liquid, whether it be milk, stock or other liquid.

Whales.

BY GEORGE FITZEL.
Author of "At Good Old Sitash."

The whale is a sea-going animal and is the largest thing that man is able to kill.

The whale does not live in rivers and lakes, owing to their lack of elbow room. His home is in the middle of the ocean. He is born at sea and he does not leave the ocean during his life, even to go into dry dock and have the barnacles scraped off his bottom.

A large whale is eighty feet long and has a tail and fins big enough to spank a schooner severely. He has one-third head. Viewing the vast and commodious forehead of the whale the observer is likely to be impressed with the size of the thinking apparatus which it must contain. This is unnecessary, however. The whale has many large empty rooms to let in his skull and cannot be trained to do even the simplest tricks. The whale is shaped like a fish but breathes with lungs. This was an oversight of Nature when she designed the whale, for eventually when he comes to the surface to breathe he is stabbed with a twenty-five pound harpoon fixed from a cannon by a coarse man in hip boots, and is cut up into fine pieces and boiled for his oil.

For many years whales lighted the world but since petroleum has been discovered to mankind by the trust he has been relieved of this job. Besides furnishing oil, the whale exercises a great influence over the design of women by furnishing whalebone with which corsets are reinforced.

The whale has a mouth almost as large as a union station, but no throat at all to speak of. If he were to swallow a meal as carelessly as a hurried business man at a lunch counter, he would choke to death. He lives on the fish and sea life, which he gulps in a hundred gallons at a time, straining through his whalebone section and swallowing the surplus water through a spout in a way which makes him look like the north Pacific fire department.

Whales have never been caught when a-birds and fish but a good many of them have barely escaped by bracing away in the rivers and streams of many countries.

A Child's Laxative Is "Syrup Of Figs"

They love to take it and it doesn't harm the tender little stomach, liver and bowels.

If your little one's tongue is coated, it is a sure sign the stomach, liver and bowels need a gentle, thorough cleansing at once. When your child is cross, peevish, listless, pale, doesn't sleep, eat or act naturally; if breath is bad, stomach sour, system full of cold, throat sore, or if feverish, give a teaspoonful of "California Syrup of Figs," and in a few hours all the clogged-up, congested waste, sour bile and undigested food will gently move out of the bowels, and you have a well, playful child again.

Sick children needn't be coaxed to take this harmless "fruit laxative." Millions of mothers keep it handy because they know its action on the stomach, liver and bowels is prompt and sure. They also know a little given to-day saves a sick child to-morrow.

Ask your druggist for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which contains directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups plainly on the bottle. Beware of counterfeiters and jokers. Get the genuine, made by "California Fig Syrup Company." Don't be fooled!

Sunday Concerts

Editor Evening Telegram.

Dear Sir,—While I have no desire to trespass at any length upon your valued space, much less to enter into a lengthy discussion as to the merits or demerits of Sunday Concerts, as I think enough has already been said upon that phase of the subject, and to continue a wordy war over this question is neither dignified or edifying to your intelligent readers, I wish, however, to draw attention to a remark made by one of your correspondents who signed himself "Layman," that in England and Canada, Sunday Concerts are under the ban of the law, which is to him sufficient evidence that it ought so to be here, and proves conclusively, to his mind, at least that Sunday Concerts are wholly wrong.

Such reasoning, it would seem to me is akin to an insult to the intelligence of the twentieth century.

There was a time when to possess a Bible was under the ban of the law. There was also a time when a man was under the ban of the law for refusing to submit to have his child baptized by sprinkling, and there are others now, either, to hold services (religious), are under the ban of the law.

Just to show how ridiculous religious laws are, let me say, there was a time when, for a man to embrace or kiss his wife on Sunday was under the ban of civil law. Does this prove that to possess a Bible, or to hold religious services, etc., were wrong? According to "Layman's" reasoning I not, why not?

It does prove, however, to what extent over-zealous Christians (?) will go, when once they can clothe themselves with the armour of civil law for the purpose of enforcing their particular religious tenets.

Another phase of this discussion over which some of your readers are puzzling their brains, is the matter of commercializing on Sunday. I've been rightly informed, the gentleman of the College Hall, about a year ago, hired that hall to the Concert Committee for the purpose of holding a sacred concert on Sunday. In doing so, the latter had to submit to the ruling of the former, not to charge an admission fee. Why? Because in their minds, to do so contravened the sanctity of the Sabbath. But pray, Mr. Editor, according to what side of reasoning, did those gentlemen harmonize the routine of the hall on Sunday, and charging full hire to cover cost of same, with Sunday sacredness, and, at the same time, make the hiring of the seats, by the concert people, to cover cost of same to contravene the sacredness of Sunday? Is it the amount charged the place in which it is charged, or is it a matter whose of is good? It reminds one of the little boy who, while going to Sunday school, lost his penny on the way, and so overjoyed was he, when, after searching a considerable time, on discovering it in the drain, ejaculated: "Oh God! I see it." was remonstrated with by his big sister, "You little d—! you mustn't say golly on Sunday."

Thanking you for your courtesy,
Yours truly,
