Famous French
Belfrey in Ruins.

GERMANS WRECK ARRAS.

North of France, Oct. 9.—Refugees reaching the sea coast to-day from Arras report that yesterday the Germans shelled the town and ruined the glorious old belfrey of the Hotel de Ville. They also sent several projectiles crashing into the cathedral.

Thus does history repeat itself. The cathedral church of St. Vaasts stands on the very spot of the early Christian church which was destroyed by Huns. Whether shell fire has damaged Corot's superb statue of the Blessed Virgin, Rubens' "Descent from the Cross" and "Christ in the Tomb," attributed to Van Dyck, is not yet known here, but refugees are emphatic in saying that the cathedral had been struck and that the belfrey, the greatest ornament of the town, was in ruins.

The artillery fire was concentrated on the Hotel de Ville, or city hall, yesterday morning. There was no reason for it except a senseless desire to smash something that the citizens treasured and visitors admired. If there had been any desire to spare the grand sixteenth century specimen of the master masons' art, it was prominent enough for any expert gunner to avoid hitting it, and so was the cathedral, which lay behind it.

Bombarded for Days.

There had been fighting around Arras for days. German forces gathered on the plain to the eastward last Saturday, and they were employed against the town on the following day. There was some firing Monday, but it was Tuesday and Wednesday when the heaviest attack was made.

The early bombardment from the hills did not do much damage, but yesterday morning more guns were brought into use, and the violent cannonade spread death and destruction among the people.

Some citizens had taken timely warning of the situation. No one was encouraged to remain in town. All miles between the ages of eighteen and forty-five years had been advised to go to a coast resort, where they would be safe. The younger men, liable to be soon called to the colors, were recommended to get away to avoid being taken prisoners by the enemy. Many citizens needed the warning, but it is probable that a goodly number are hiding in the cellars of the houses whose roofs have been battered down on their heads.

French military authorities told the inhabitants they believed that within two hours the enemy would attempt to take the place. Their prediction was accurate. In less than that time the Germans advanced and, after a desperate encounter, got across the stream which runs along the eastern boundary of the town, and gained a footing inside the ramparts, an ancient fortification designed by Vauban, a famous engineer of two and a half centuries ago.

The refugees believe that the Germans entered by the Porte St. Michel, which leads to the Grande Place. One of them expressed the hope that they had left by Porte des Soupirs, the Gate of Sighs, which, would, he said, be an appropriate exit for the destroyers of historic monuments.

Allies Rally to Attack.

Once in the town the enemy had no rest. The allied army on the western side had been re-inforced, probably by way of the Amiens road, which was and is still open, and while few of the civilian refugees were pouring out of the city, French military forces were entering.

There was a lot of rifle firing in the streets, and to the din of independent musketry fire was added the tap-tap of machine-guns. Gradually the enemy was forced back and the French regained complete possession of Arras, although four of the five gates were still commanded by the Germans.

One of the refugees who trudged his way to the French lines westward where an empty troop train brought him to safety, may be unduly optimistic, but he declared he believed the Germans would not get into Arras again, although their guns may create more havoc.

The ruined belfrey was completed in 1554. It was a part of the Hotel de Ville, which was begun in 1501. The tower was nearly 250 feet high and was terminated by a crown with a curious heraldic lion on top. The belfrey had famous bells and a remarkable clock.

Coast towns in northwest France are again full of refugees. During the past four days thousands have left Arras, Douai, Lille and St. Omer.

Traitor Degraded.

Dramatic Scene in Paris.

Paris, Sept. 27.—The courtyard of the Paris Military School was the scene of a dramatic ceremony yesterday morning. In the presence of detachments of the 29th Regiment of French Territorial Infantry and of the 1st Cuirassiers the spy Grault, a clerk convicted of having attempted to sell the plans of the military wireless station on the Eiffel Tower to the Germans, was degraded in accordance with the military tradition.

Grault was led on to the ground between a guard of four soldiers with fixed bayonets. The officer commanding read out the sentence of death, passed by the court, which has since been commuted to imprisonment for life in a fortress, after which he pronounced the customary formula: "Grault, you are unworthy to bear arms. In the name of the French people we degrade you."

Thereupon a corporal seized the prisoner and ripped from the latter's uniform his corporal's stripes and buttons of his tunic, after which Grault, who with bowed head looked the very picture of shame, was marched along the front of the troops in dead silence and then sent back to prison in a prison van.

People are doing more reading to-day than ever before, and it is very important to those who wear glasses that they should be properly fitted. If you have any trouble or are in doubt, go to TRAFALGAR, the Eye-Sight Specialist.—sept.17

THEY SET IN ANTWERP.

Amsterdam, Oct. 12. (Despatch to the London Daily Chronicle).—I have been able to get details of the German occupation of Antwerp from Dutch friends who have been there since Friday. As neutrals they can go there with little risk, though for an English journalist to make the trip would be to invite execution as a spy.

Up to the present the Germans have done no plundering; and the city is well policed by armed guards. The soldiers are using the city's brigades appliances to extinguish the fires that still smolder in buildings wrecked by shells, but the water supply seems inadequate.

Many instances of hurried flight are to be found in bundles of clothing and other property left in the streets by refugees who found that they had brought from home more than they could carry away. In the streets on the outskirts are Belgian guns still in position and hastily formed barricades.

The Germans seem very anxious for the population to return, and promise their safety if they behave peacefully. Some of the people have already returned, but there does not appear to be any general tendency in that direction.

The German soldiers entered the town singing. Many were decorated with flowers, having nosegays in their tunics, in the muzzles of their rifles, and in their horses' bridles. But this triumphant entry was only for spectacular purposes, and most of the troops afterward marched out again to encamp on the outskirts. There are now few German soldiers in the city except in the square before the Hotel de Ville.

As regards the damage inflicted by the shells, I am able to furnish the following details from the testimony of observers, but the list must not be taken as being complete. Among the buildings destroyed were Palace de Justice, a Synagogue, St. Joseph's Church, the Hippodrome, the Minerva Motor Works, the House, 810 in Avenue Des Arts, and Tinchents cigar factory in the Place De Melir. Very serious damage was done in the Avenue Du Sud, the Rue Des Esplanades, the Rue De La Justice, and the Avenue Quatinet Mayers. Other damage was done chiefly in the southern part of the town and in the suburbs of Berchem and Zurenborg.

It was a pathetic experience while compiling this list to be surrounded by a group of refugees asking what news there was of the streets in which their homes had once been.

Vigorol

Weak and run-down. Tired and sluggish. Eyes feel heavy. Headaches and feverish. Don't allow these symptoms to continue. Tone yourself up. Get a bottle of VIGOROL, it will do it, and do it quickly. Every spring one needs a good tonic. VIGOROL acts as a general house-cleaner; it goes after every organ and cleanses it. Get it to-day. At all drug stores.

Britain Needs
More Fighting Men.

London, Oct. 12.—England's need of more fighting men was emphasized by the announcement to-night that the infantry standard, which has been raised to check the great rush of recruits at the outbreak of the war has again been lowered. The minimum height for recruits, which formerly was five feet six inches, has been placed at five feet four inches, and chest measurement from 35 1/2 inches to 34 1/2 inches.

An appeal has been issued in Glasgow for two thousand recruits to replace the naval men interned in Holland.
