woman—of their having gone by mistake, she and her mistress, to the wrong side of the station at Hiddon, and had thereby lost a train. They went, naturally enough perhaps for inexperienced travelers, to the side of the platform on which they had descended on going; and it was not until a train came up to the other side, took in the passengers waiting on that side of the platform, and went onto Hallingham, that they discovered their mistake. But for that they would have been in Hallingham safe when the accident happened to the late train. Then there was the fact of Mark Cray's having been in the train, of his having been the first one to see Lady Oswald. When brought afterwards to the home terminus, she had said, "Mr. Cray will go home with me;" and later she had insisted on him taking the operation. He, himself, had been called out to Thorndyke, had been kept there while the long hours of the best put of the day filted away. Had he not been called out, why the operation would, beyond all question have been performed in the morning, probably by himself, for he should have seen her early and detected its need. There was the absence of the pupil Julius Wild, through what appeared to be an unaccountable mistake; had that pupil been present, to him would have fallen the task of getting Parkins from the room, and the chloroform could not have been administered. A curious chapter of accidents—or (what are called such—and Dr. Davenal lost filmself in the chain of thought. "Oh merciful father, forgive him! forgive him this slight's work '!'he murmured, "And mayest thou have taken that poor woman to her yest!"

ing from his chair. "Wait until you are called."

Neal after a moment's stare, shot back again. It was not so much the sharp words, more imperative than those commonly used by his master, but the tone of pain in which they were spoken, that struck Neal; nay it almost seemed as if his entrance, had brought a sort of terror to the doctor.

It was not terror. Neal was mistaken. But Dr. Davenal had been so completely buried in thought, not altogether of this world, that the abrupt interruption with its commonplace excuse, had seemed to him singularly inopportune, causing him to ware away abruptly both the man and his words.

He satonin the dark again, and Neal took his place at the front door, and stood there looking out. Not a soul was in the house, save himself and his master; and it may have seemed to Neal a more cheering way of passing the evening than to be shut up in doors.

passing the evening than to be shut up indoors.

It grew darker. Neal strolled along by the skirting of the shrubs of the garden, and took his stand at the front gate, ready to exchange courtesies with the people who would soon be going home from church and chapel. The moon did not give much light yet, but the night promised to be as bright at the previous one had been.

"Halloa!" cried Neal, as a man he knew came up quickly. "You are in a hurry tonight."

"I have been out on business, Mr. Neal," replied the man, was in fact an assistant to a carpenter and undertaker. "Our work can't always wait for the Sabbath to go by before it is seen to."

"Lady Oswald. The message came down to us the best part of an hour ago, so I've been up there."

It has been observed that Neal has been too well trained a gentleman both in manners and nerves, to express much surprise, but the answer did cause him the very greatest sheek. He was so startled as to take refuge in disbelse."

"Lady Oswald, did you say? But she's not dead!"

"But she is," replied the man. "I ought toknow. I've just come from her."

"Do you mean chloroform."

"That's it. I never can remember the name. But I'd rather call it poison, for my par:—killing folks off without a warning."

"Who gave it to Lady Oswald?"

"Your master," replied the man, lowering his voice to a whisper as he gianced at the windows of the house. "The servants were in the room with me up there, and they told me about it. There was something to be done to my lady—some bones to be set, I believe—and the doctors went this afternoon, and they gave her this stuff and it killed her. I wonder purliament don't make a law against its use, for my part."

"I am sorry to hear this," exclaimed Neal.

"My lady was very frienly to me."

"Ay. The servants be cut up like anything. And enough to make 'em! It's a shocking thing. The lady's maid says she can't think why they should have given her the stuff, for Mr. Cray himself told her, when he was there in the afternoon, that what they had to do to my lady wouldn't hurt her no more than a fleabite. Anyway, she's dead. But I can't stop here. I must get back with the measure. Good-night, Mr. Neal,"

"Good-night," replied Neal.

SARNIA SUNBEAMS.

Visit of the Seventh Fusiliers—The G. T. R. Roundhouse.

The beautiful steel steamer Manitoba, of the C. P. R., which runs from Owen Sound to Port Arthur, called at Sarnia, the other day, and many of our citizens went on board and were delighted with the splendid furnishings. Capt. Anderson, a former resident of Sarnia, is in command.

The death is announced of Harry Leslie, the bright young son of Mr. H. W. Mills, manager of the Sarnia Street Railway.

Posters are out announcing the coming of the Seventh Fusiliers, of London, on May 24, and they will no doubt be greeted by a large erowd on that occasion.

The offices of the Street Railway Company are nearly completed and will be a great improvement. They face on Front street, opposite the Hotel Vendome.

On Tuesday evening, May 9, the Companions of the Forest, A. O. F., held an "At Home" in their lodge room. A splendid programme of songs, readings, recitations, etc., was rendered. Bro. Richards, of London, who organized the circle about a year ago, was present, and gave the ladies of Sarnia some pointers in regard to joining the Companions. The circle here has a membership of nearly 50, a very good showing for the length of time organized.

The Oddfellows are around among their lady friends. soliciting names to start a lodge of the Daughters of Rebekah.

The G. T. R. officials have finally decided to build the roundhouse as the tunnel station, and work will be immediately commenced. Point Edward will then be truly called the "Deserted Village," although grass could never be induced to grow on its streets. This move will necessitate the removal to the south ward of all the train hands now residing at the Point.

The convention of the bee-keepers of Lambton will meet in Sarnia on Friday, the 19th inst., to discuss the best way to prevent the bees from becoming extinct, as there was great mortality mong the bees last winter, whele apiaries being swept away.

cipal institutions and the police power, under which it may fairly be claimed the liquor traffic falls.

All through the arguments both days, the chief justice and Mr. Justice Taschereau appeared to be strongly in favor of the new view that the total prohibition of the liquor traffic could be exercised by the provinces by virture of their power to establish and exercise local government under the provincial system. Those members of the court seemed to place great stress on the fact that the Dunkin Act of 1864 was a purely municipal affair, and, in the view of the chief justice, can only be repealed by the local and not the general parliament. As his Lordship said, the Dominion Parliament may have the power to prohibit prohibition, but until they exercise that power it may be that the provinces can, within the municipal and police powers, pass a prohibition liquor law. Chief Justice Strong and Justice Taschereau leaned to the view that both the Federal and Local Legislatures may have power to pass a prohibitory law. On the other hand, Mr. Justice Sedgewick seemed to hold the view, judging from his remarks, that the Federal authority alone has this power. Then the extent of the prohibition comes in question also. The respondents in this case only seek to make out a case for the power to prohibit the retail trade. Mr. Du Vernet replied, contending that the Dominion alone has the power to prohibit, and that such a law as the Ontario Local Option Act was unconstitutional. Judgment was reserved.

"Yes, Lactated Food is now ahead of all other foods ever prepared for the use of infants, and my sales of it are increasing every month. I know a host of mothers who are using it, and all speak highly of it as a nourisher and flesh-builder."

These are the words of one of Ontario's most prominent druggists, who has had a varied experience in the sale of foods.

Lactated Food is the choice of thousands of mothers in every section of our country; they have tested it severely and have never known it to fail. It is the only pre-digested food known to the medical faculty. It is the only food that is tolerated on weak atomachs. Weak and puny infants, when fed with Lactated Food, soon show signs of true vitality and strength; it builds up quickly the emaciated and worn body, and often saves the lives of precious darlings. If baby has to be fed artificially, give it Lactated Food and nothing else.
