LEAGUE OF NATIONS WILL HOLD INVESTIGATION

Geneva, July 4.—The council of the League of Nations decided to undertake during the course of the present session an investigation into the recent happenings and general situation in the Sarre Valley. A resolution this effect was adopted unanimously both France and Great Britain concurring. Lord Cecil, British Spokesman, demanded a complete investigation of the Sarre situation at yesterday's meeting of the council. Declaring that the degrees promulgated were due to the initiative of the French government, although the Sarre commission was responsible only to the League, Lord Robert asked that the French troops be withdrawn from the valley and the gendarmes increased.

PRIMITIVE "HAZERS."

Indians Did What Small Boys Love to Do.

The business of being "a soaring human boy," as Mr. Bitgins or some body expressed it, seems to be much more complicated than had hitherto been supposed. Canon Lyttleton, headmaster of Eaton, has informed the English public that a large proportion of boys between fourteen and seventeen years are "a little mad."

Well, judging by some of the boys we know the canon's conclusion may not be wide of the mark. He was defending the English public schools when we call preparatory schools—from the imputation of being hotbeds of hazing, or "ragging," as they call it over there.

A boy at the famous "Blue Coat" school had committed suicide after being obliged by his school-fellows for poor playing at a football game. Which recalls the fact that when Shelley was a schoolboy the other boys led him a dog's life and a "Shelley hunt" was esteemed great sport.

The difficulty experienced by the United States Government in abolishing hazing at West Point and Annapolis seem to show that the "ragging" instinct has it roots pretty deep in the nature of the "soaring human boy," even when he is approaching years of discretion.

Some savant launched the doctrine that the young human animal on its journey from babyhood to maturity passes through every successive stage of development as experienced by the human race from its infancy to the present time. And on that principle the schoolboy passion for hazing might be taken as proof that he had reached the Red Indian stage of evolution.

For the Indians, like all primitive races had a painful system of hazing, the purpose of which was to test the vigor, courage and endurance of the would-be warrior, chief or medicine man.

In other words, the hazing of the Indians was a system of initiation, based upon an idea that is probably as old as humanity itself. Civilization, which cannot tolerate brutality, has suppressed the primitive rigors of initiation, leaving only the empty shell in the thumbs, threats and rough house horse-play of lodge rituals.

But a suppressed instinct snarls up the unconscious, according to the psychoanalysts and it would be interesting to have the Freudians and Jungles tell us whether the school boys of to-day, compelled to suppress their Red Indian inclinations, are not suffering from a consequent bunch of complexes leading to the following results, as described by Canon Lyttleton:

"Weird fancies, always egotistic suspiciousness, moroseness, solitariness, all these are common, but they present most divers appearances to the observer. Among the rougher boys arson is not infrequently and kleptomania is fairly rampant with all classes."

The "corporate life of a school" and the "healthy claims of athletics" are extolled by Dr. Lyttleton as antidotes for these aberrations of boyhood, and he thinks the housemasters of the big schools lack public appreciation for the burden they lift from the shoulders of the "insouciant parents."

Among the initiatory rites practiced by the Indians on a would-be chief was that of tying him in a hammock after he had been well thrashed several times without uttering a complaint and peppering him with venomous ants. A further hazing stunt was to light a fire beneath him.

A Sioux who aspired to be a medicine man was bound to the earth with cords passing through holes pierced in his armpits and muscles and with bow and arrow poised in his hands lay all day gazing at the sun. And it may be such tribal memories as these, stirring the blood of Britches and American school and college boys, that make them feel like taking the "smoke" out of the leopards among them.

Mrs. Margaret Bredon Hamm, whose wedding to Sir Henry Sharp, Secretary to the Government of Canada, took place in London, England, recently, was born in the village of Oshawa, near Kingston, Ont. Her husband, the late George Hamm, was a general merchant in that village.

Mr. Hamm was a member of the 10th Battalion, Canadian Expeditionary Force, and was killed in action at the battle of Vimy.

Two years ago Mr. Hamm was killed in a motor accident. His children were educated in Kingston, his son, Harry Hamm, now an English student, having attended the Royal Military College there.

Lady Sharp's daughter, who is the wife of the American Consul-General in Toronto.

Lady Sharp was for some years Secretary of the Canadian Red Cross there. Last fall she went to Russia to attend the coronation of the king and queen.

Tragedy on Way from Boston to New York.

New York, June 26.—Having only

man aboard the steamship Northland, enroute from Boston to New York gave that away and then hurled himself into Long Island Sound. Although the ship turned about and circled the spot where he was last seen, the body was not recovered.

He made his parting gift to a group of Sisters of Charity with the words:

"Here's my bottom dollar." "I won't

MARQUIS WHEAT AND ITS GROWER

What Dr. William Saunders and Sons Have Done For Canada.

Man has learned to do some remarkable things with organic life, both animal and vegetable. He must do the work experimentally, for, although he has found out much about the laws that govern heredity, he cannot account for some of the things that happen or fail to happen when living stocks are blended. But still he usually finds a way to get what he wants from Mother Nature. Let us consider for an example, Marquis Wheat.

Northwestern Canada is a land of wide-spreading grasses well adapted to farming and so far north for any other crop that is not so profitable as wheat. But you cannot grow winter wheat in Canada or even in the northern tier of states in our own country. The severe winters are sure to kill any plants that have sprouted and begun to grow in the fall. Canada must have a spring-sown wheat, and if its people are to take advantage of the fields that spread up to the Peace River Valley within a few degrees of the Arctic Circle, it must be a rapidly growing variety, one that matures within ten weeks of planting.

There are other qualities that a useful variety must have. It must be able to resist drought no less than cold, for western Canada is often both cold and dry; if it is to sell at a good price, it must mill well and bake well; and it must produce a high yield to the acre.
