The first called was Kate Fleming, who ppeared with a very serious and careworn look on her face, showing that the charge brought against her had caused no small degree of anxiety. She is stout, matron-like, well dressed, and yesterday wore a valuable well dressed, and yesterday were a valuable fur jacket. From her appearance one would hardly imagine that she was up for the fifth time to answer the charge of keeping a house of ill-fame, and against whom there are six previous convictions for selling liquor without a license. She withdrew her former plea and pleaded guilty. The magistrate then sentenced her to "six months in the Mercer." She seemed to be thunderstruck, attempted to, but could say nothing, and was led quietly out of the room by one of the policemen. In the hall, however, she broke down, and commenced bemoaning at the top of her voice, her hard fate. While a number of her own and the inmates of other houses gathered around her and endeavored to

The inmates of Kate Fleming's hous were then paraded. They were Maggie Raymond, Lillie Elliott, Hattie Smith and Raymond, Lillie Elliott, Hattie Smith and Mabel Nelson. The mother of the first named appeared to claim her daughter. She said she had received a telegram from her, saying she was in trouble, but did not know the trouble. She had come to rescue her. The magistrate spoke of sending Maggie to the Mercer; the mother cried bitterly and said "O, for God's sake, sir, don't send her there; I'll take her home and try to make her a better girl." She was allowed to go on her own bail to appear for sentence when called upon. Hattie Smith, who appeared very sad and dejected, was allowed to go, as it was shown that she was only a visitor. Lillie Elliott and Mabel Neilson were each fined $50 and costs or six months to the Mercer.

The next one brought up was Mary
Davis, who was charged with being a keeper of a house of ill-fame at 188 York street, pleaded not guilty. The evidence against her as well as in the other cases was given by the police and the informer, Stock. She has already been convicted twice for the same offence, and this time she was fined $100 without costs which she immediately paid as if it were a matter of every day occurrence. Her inmates who were unsuc-cessful in obtaining bail were then brought up. Margaret Johnson and Sarah Hara were sent to the Mercerfor 6 months; Nellie

She was fined $50 and costs or six months. May Morrison, an inmate, was ill and was therefore remanded until Dec. 13. Mabel White and Lizzie Estin were each fined $50 and costs or six months. While Mabel White was being tried, a young fellow wearing a buffalo overcoat said he came from Chicago to claim Mabel as his sister. Mr. Fenton said "the brother dodge is to old a one in this court," and no attention was therefore paid to him. May White paid her own as well as the fines of her two inmates.
