Our exchanges speak favourably of the crops in the United States, and the last accounts from Great Britain, and several parts of the European continent, are of an encouraging character. Abundance and cheapness are therefore likely to continue in the ascendant; that is, of course, if the will of Providence, be pleased to ordain it. It is now confidently asserted and believed by all parties, that the new British ministry will not attempt any re-imposition of a duty on corn The prospect for fruit is, in some respects good, apples will probably prove abundant, but most kinds of stone-fruit are greatly afflicted by the Curculio, whose devastations appear yearly to increase, and the fruit buds of the peach, in many situations, have been injured, or rather completely destroyed, by the severity of last winter. We get similar accounts from most of the fruit-growing districts of the The grain markets in England continue much the same as for some time past; and but little change has to be noted in reference to our own. Another month will enable us to speak with more confidence of the probable result of the growing crops.
