The photograph of the children was taken on our place here after we had moved over from the Compound of the General Society, and, with the exception of one, all who attended the school there have come over, many of their homes being just as near here as there. At first our school was held in what had been a guest room, then when that was wanted we took a room in the upper court that had been prepared as a ward, where we remained until the rooms were finished on the other side.
