

The native population has learned little of modern methods of agriculture, and little has been done to assist them. Besides the old Roman wooden plow -- sometimes steel-tipped -- such water-wheels as the one above are frequently used for pumping water.