

have been fined; that was all that had been done to them. I trust it is not all that will be done; and I am sure it will be a standing disgrace to the new Province of Saskatchewan and to Liberalism if these men are not punished to the full extent of the law. The public would draw the conclusion that if these men were not prosecuted, it was because the prosecution would tend to incriminate others who occupy higher positions. It is these men in the higher positions who ought to be punished even more than the men who took part in the wrong-doing. It would be a good thing if we had a public prosecutor who was armed with power to take the initiative in all such cases."

The difference between Mr. Rowell and the Whitney administration is this: Mr. Rowell condemns political corruption just as strongly if it be practiced by a political friend, as if practiced by a political opponent, as illustrated by his address at the Liberal Convention in 1904, and also by his dealing with the Evanturel incident in the Legislature; whereas the members of the present Government condemn political corruption only when practiced by their political opponents.
