The street car men declared it was 12 o'clock, but the Billies and Maudles knew what time they were accustomed to have dinner, even if they quarreled with the sun.

As each school division was unloaded, teachers and pupils marched to the section of the park allotted to them, two standard-bearers carrying the school banner. Where time permitted, races and other events were run off before the midday meal, several of the schools, including the collegiate institute, being for looking after the young folks of their rooms and seeir" that no one was allowed to go hulgry or permitted to get lost, strayed or stolen.
