The Farmer's Wife.—Do you like fumed oak? During the August sales you can buy very attractive and reasonably priced furniture of that type. For your diningroom the set of six chairs in quarter-cut oak, fumed finish, can be bought for $15.50; they have leather seats and high backs of good design.

A buffet to match will cost $26.50; it has a low mirror across the back, the usual long linen drawer and two smaller drawers, one lined for cutlery; the cupboard is unusually, roomy, and all drawers and doors open with square wooden pulls.

ers and doors open with square wooden pulls.

Perhaps proportionally less money should go into the dining table than into the other furniture, so I am suggesting one at $9.50 in plain (not quarter-cut) fumed oak which should admirably suit your purpose; this table is round and supported by a square pedestal. So much for actual dining furniture, but if the room is to be used also as a living-room you will want some easy chairs, will you not?

room is to be used also as a living-room you will want some easy chairs, will you not?

For $8.50 each you may buy a rocker and an armchair of the same quarter-cut fumed oak, and with seat and panel in the back upholstered in a dull tapestry in browns and greens. These two chairs would do much to redeem your room from being the purely utilitarian dining-room, and would give it a decided charm. Then a couch would seem almost a necessity, would it not?

None of the large, "comfy" kind is obtainable within the price limits you set, but to me a very attractive substitute would be the divan-cot with chintz cover to match in colorine the tapestry on the chairs. The cot with mattress would cost $6.00; samples of chints of various prices are being mailed to you. The same could be used for overcurtains for the windows, and the dull hues would tend to moderate the glare of light from those west and south windows.

If you would prefer it, you might purchase a lounge upholstered in imitation leather, Spanish finish, price $13.75. A little desk in quarter-cut fumed oak with cane panels in the sides and a number of piegon-holes and convenient drawers would form a welcome addition to the other furniture; the price is $9.50.

Georgie.—Brown leather for uphoistering couches and chairs sells for 50c and 70c per square foot. If you have no prejudice against substitutes you might find the imitation leather equally attractive, and certainly it is more moderately priced. All is in 50-inch width, and in the plain pebble finish is priced at $1.25 per yard. The "Craftsman" finish, in tobacco brown with darker markings, costs $2.50 per yard, while the "Moorish," presenting a very dark, irregular surface, and another in a coarse grained "art" finish, which perhaps more perfectly than finish, which perhaps more perfectly than any of the others simulates the real leather, may be obtained for $1.75 per yard.

M. K.—Aren't you the luckiest person? To have fallen heir to an old Grand piano, such as you describe, seems too great good fortune for any mere mortal. Your idea of having it, transformed into a library table is certainly an excellent one, and should be quite easy to carry out. Those solid wainut bureaus are among the choicest articles about which lovers of the beautiful can plan a room. If they are of the old-fashioned, high type with only a small mirror on top, do not under any circumstances change them, except to remove the supports holding the glass, and let it be suspended above the chest of drawers; have all polished, and you may rest assured you have a real treasure. Desks or bookcases might be made from your wainut tables if you have no use for them in their present form; they would be very handsome if properly designed.

For your living-room with the north light you should have paper of amber and gold tones and window hangings of the same, with perhaps a touch of rose to add still more warmth of tone.
