

CANADIAN TOMMIES PHOTOGRAPHED ON THEIR HAZARDOUS DUTIES

The living do not forget the dead. The Canadians, during a lull in fighting, decorate their comrades' resting-place.

Aquatic sports have a strong fascination for the soldier on leave, and anything which resembles a boat is pressed into service.

At the setting of the sun these men marched to get up their places in the front line.

The "Tin-Horse" Brigade going forth in search of adventure. Most of them are despatch riders.

A tense moment when the command is given to go "over the top." A regiment of Highlanders charging the enemy trenches.

Tho near the line the M.C.'s of a dressing station still have their table, chairs and white tablecloths.
