Song of the Open Trolley.

When drenching torrents fall to earth Or chilling breezes gambol,

Or chilling breezes gambol,

'Tis then I leave my dismal shed
And o'er the city amble.
The rain it soaks my bouncing floor
With many a flowing puddle,
While flapping curtains shake their drips
Where happy people huddle.
My seats are soaked at either end;
I'm full of mud—0. golly.
You cannot guess what fun it is
To be an open trolley.

Lieber M.— All eyes are turned to ward Cronberg. There is not the slightest doubt but that the end is near at hand. You read of the disease, cancer, having reached that stage where there is no pain accompanying it. While the reports all say no danger, the medical professors here tell me that the end is really near at hand and that ten days will be the extended to the shipping trade. The bill has another significance according to this journal, and that is that the emperor is not all powerful in his own dominions. The emperor has taken every opportunity to propound his opinion that "the future of Germany lies on the water." The Agaraians, on the other hand, state that the future of Germany lies in benefiting the landed proprietors by means of high protective duites on agricultural products, and the emperor and his government have most certainly succumbed to their demands. There is no doubt that he bill in its final form will be very dincremit from the one published last Saturday, and that the Agrarians while rejoicing now may weep when the bill is finally reformed. It was to be expected that the movement of settlers from Ontario, in particular, to the west would have a decided effect upon the population of the disposed to undertake the responsibilities of rearing large families. This is especially true of Ontario. The census department's only consolation is the confidence that its duties have, in the recent enumeration, been discharged to the letter. There is, I should say, perhaps, another consideration which should not be lost sight of in connection with this matter. A mistake has been discovered in the population of Calgary, Northwest Territories, owing to the incorporation of some returns given for another place. The correct sand they had been attending an outrence, and they had been attending an outring of the East End Claub of Lawrence at Rafferty, is laund in the Merrimack between this city and Methuen.
