

A Letter to Keri...

Franz was perhaps the only person (I do not call him a man for his actions were not those that constitute a man) I truly hated. He was a threat to my love. She was the only girl I had ever loved and I had given everything to her — my heart, my soul, and my life. Damn Franz, with his boyish looks. He knew that she felt guilty over him and he hammered home the guilt, often sulking alone, but quite aware of her presence. If I ever lost her I would not kill him, perhaps I would maim him, even more possibly I would maim him in a certain area. No! I could only dream these pleasant thoughts. She swears allegiance to me, yet she is going out with him on their anniversary. Damn you, Franz! You know how to get to me.
