Gured Mr. George Graves, Pitts Ferry, Ont., of a very bad case of kidney trouble.

He tells about the cure in the following words: "I cannot recommend Doan's Kidney Pills too highly. I never took anything that did me so much good. I had a severe pain in the small of my back and could scarcely get up or down without help. I could hardly urinate, but when I did the pain was terrible. I was in the Hotel Dieu, Kingston, last winter and when I came out I was some better but not cured. It was then I saw Doan's Kidney Pills advertised. Since taking them I have been completely cured and have not had any trouble with my kidneys since."

The Marvellous Methods of K.

Writing in "Blackwood's," "Staff Off

Writing in "Blackwood's," "Staff Officer" essays to convey to the civilian reader some conception of the methods that have brought to Kitchener the highest military reputation and success of any soldier of this generation. Amongst other things he says:

"The future biographer of Viscount Kitchener will experience many difficulties when he endeavors to trace the reconquest of the Soudan in the archives of the Egyptian War Office. None of bur generals before Kitchener ever attempted, still less succeeded in attempting, to wage war without orders, without forms, without states or paperasserie of any sort or kind.

Kitchener's office stationery consisted of a sheaf of telegraph-forms which he carried in his helmet and a pencil which he carried in his pocket—and that sufficed. Moreover, he seldom read an official letter, and never wrote one, and how much wear and tear wrote one, and how much wear and tear was thereby saved let those say who have had the misfortune to serve under generals afflicted with the curse of pen-manship. I do not offer it as a model for imitation, first, because Kitcheners for imitation, first, because Ritoneners do not grow on eyery tree, and next, because the conditions of one campaign are never exactly reproduced in another. Even as it was, had anything tappened to K., it would have taken Pall Mall and Cairo a few years to discover where and what the army was, and they would have been forced to resort to advertise treat to the exercic services.

Cairo a few years to discover where and what the army was, and they would have been forced to resort to advertisements in the agony columns of the dervish newspapers to obtain elementary ideas on the subject.

"Each commander of the units scattered all over that enormous strategic chessboard, from Cairo to Kassala and from Suakin to Korti, only knew, only was allowed to know, what he saw at the extremity of his sun-blistered nose. He had, say, four companies, a few camel corps orderlies, and so many days' supplies; he had an idea that Dick This or Harry The Other occupied a post or a well some hundreds of miles away; but whether the army had marched or fought, or won or had disappeared bodily into the Great Beyond, he never knew, and had grown tired of trying to discover. Why should he know or care? K. looked after that, K. looked after everything; and the very moment that the last mouthful of grain was being issued to the cattle, down dropped, like manna from heaven, a fresh supply in the nick of time, coming from goodness knows where, by road or rail or river: down it was dumped, and with a word and a blow away went the transport to serve someone else, who also thought that if he did not die of ennui he could make a tolerable certainty of starvation—and was always disappointed. And then one fine day when he least expected it, and had come to reckon himself as a dead man out of mind, a few curt words came clicking off on the wires—Marth in half an hour.' And he marched, and all the others marched, and everybody marched, until he woke on another fine morning at dawn to find he was with others, and that he and the others were the army. And how it was done he did not stop to enquire, was not indeed allowed time to ask, for all the news he got was to march again at dawn."

ness has Disappeared.

To what desperate straits Dyspepsia will reduce a man is exemplified by the story told by Hene Trudel, a student, of Three Rivers, Quebec. "Sometimes," says Mr. Trudel, "I had slight attacks of Indigestion. Then for some weeks it made alarming progress. I became discouraged, weak, and almost in despair. I resolved to give up my studies, when a happy accident put a Dodd's Almanac in my hands and I made up my mind to try Dodd's Dyspepsia Tablets.

"I began using Dodd's Dyspepsia Tablets in January and for six weeks I took one after each meal, sometimes two. After that, feeling greatily better, I only took one after supper; now, from time to time, I take one if I feel a little fatigued after eating.

Dodd's Dyspepsia Tablets made me better. To-day I have no headache, no weariness, no pain. I am cured."

Pessimism of Educated Youth.

Almost any evening, at dinner time, there may be seen in a well-known down town restaurant a group of young men, who occupy always the same corner and spend a long time talking over their coffee and cigars. They are all college graduates of a recent date, occupied in the day in getting a start in life, or, as one of them, who is engaged in some sort of literary work, more picturesquely puts it, "bucking the metropolis with a stub pen." Few have heard their talk, for when a stranger falls among them they are decorously polite, but uncommunicative, in the spirit of their leader. A few, however, have been initiated, and municative, in the spirit of their leader. A few, however, have been initiated, and describe the conversations as "a series of carefully cultivated cynicisms, led by a lecture." Thus do their guests become victims to phrase-making.

"It would be hard to diagnose their complaint," said one of these victims; "they are so cheerful in their wee. Nothing at present suits them, and they all pronounce their daily tasks a bore. But they are not bothered with reform notions and don't make a public fuss. I suspect they all cherish secret ambitions of winning commonplace successes, and swap their melancholy epigrams because of winning commonplace successes, and swap their melancholy epigrams because they have no other way at present to maintain that academic seclusiveness your college graduate usually feels the lack of during the first years of his plunge into life. However, there's some truth and humor in their talk that needn't be summarily dismissed as downy faced cynicism."

And the speaker narrated as nearly as he could a speech of the leader on the subject of "How to Be Successful Though Fducated." The young man knocked his eigarette ash into the dregs of his coffee and said: "I've thought this all out, as Devery does his brilliants. It's not impromptu. I was burdened with the conception by too much paternal advice on and said: "I've thought this all out, as Devery does his brilliants. It's not impromptu. I was burdened with the conception by too much paternal advice on how to succeed. We get too much of that advice on all hands. The path from the log cabin to the White House has been exploited and explained; we have been taught how to be happy though married, and it only remains to put the teaching into practice—a minor detail; magazines conducted by underpaid editors have told us how to get from home to college with a cow for capital; the lives of our captains of industry have been laid bare from their always humble beginnings, but the really useful work is the one not done. Who will tell us how to be successful though educated?

"The worst that may be aid of a college training (until the chair of success is founded) is that it gives a young man ambitions. After all, the youth whose capital is a cow in most ins nees prefers to keep his capital and m ik it; the boy in the log cabin hopes some day to build a house with store shingles; the young worker in the steel mill thinks he may in time rise to be a foreman, and is content if he does. But the college graduate has ambitions. Nurtured in romance, fed on history, filled with the keen relish for intellectual excitement and the power of intellectual excitement and the power of intellectual mastery, he is yearly turned by the thousand into the hard world, with ambitions, but no job.

"There are open for him the law and he is yearly turned by the thousand into the hard world, with ambitions, but no job.

"There are open for him the law and medicine; but each requires three or four more years of training, and then an additional period of unremunerative waiting. There is business, but already the high school graduate has a four years' start, which, when all is said, the classics and French literature do not help to overcome. He might write novels, but his taste is too good, while a knowledge of art bars him from the drama. To be sure, there is teaching; the world still puts up with a little education in its teachers. Yet, as women will teach cheaper, even that field is restricted. It is no wonder that there are so many men of culture in the mines of Mexico and Alaska, or that so few of us college men marry before we are thirty. "Then someone asked this gloomy teacher of twenty-three, whose remarks were greeted with no applause, but quiet approval," said the outsider, "what he proposed to do about it. His answer was characteristic. "To-morrow I play golf," he said."—N. Y. "Tribune."

ARMILLIONAIRE OF INDIA.

ne of Them Will Convert His Entire Fortune of $1,000,000 Into a Public Fund for Charities.

The recent announcement that Mr. Nowrojce Manockji Wadia is about a convert a million pounds, his enare fortune, into a public trust for charitable / rposes is one more testimony alike to the wealth and the imony and to the weath and the muritizance of the Parsees of India. Regarding the first, it is a striking proof of the general topsy-turvydom of India (as judged from the western standpoint) that practically the entire commercial wealth of a country of 300,000,000 people should be in the hands of a community number-ing less than 90,000. The "wealth of India" is a myth. India is the of india is a high india is the hind of extremes; of inillions of un-deried peasants on the one hand, and of a jeweled galaxy of millionaires Rajahs and Parsees on the other. Regarding the latter, the name that stands out most prominently is that of Sir Jamsetjee Jeejcebhoy, the recognized head of the Parsees of India. A splendid example of energy and enterprise—qualities that are, indeed, typical of the Parsees—the Jeejeebhoy family is of the humblest origin. A century ago, when the British Empire in India was being formed out of the cruubling ruins of the Mogul and the Mahratta, and the Mogul and the Mahratta, and all India was in chaos the ancestor of the Jeejeebhoys was 1, poor lad, striving to gain his Cail, bread by the eweat of his brow. Then, no moner were modern methods of economics introduced into the country than this humble lad forthwith dramt of millions. He started in business as a small merchant. So far the entire trade of India had been in English hands—those of the East India Company. Now, for the fist time, measterner entered In the absence of competition the part of the conservative Hindus, he increased his business, prosper d. he increased his business, prosper-di-and finally amassed a fortune of two million sterling. For his purpose In-dia was a virgin soil, a new coun-try as yet unexploited by modern methods—even as was the United -States a generation ago; the cause of his success the same as that of the first American millionaires. Bethe first American millionaires. Because of his splendid munificence he was created first a K.C.B. and then a Baronet—the first in India. For, if he amassed a fortune, he knew hew to spend it. He gave away a million pounds, half his fortune, in charities. Hospitals, colleges and rest-houses were founded and endowed by him.

The present Baronet, Sir Jamset-jee Jeejeebhoy, the third from the founder, succeeded in 1877, and since then he has well maintained the traditions of his house. With increasditions of his house. With increas-ing wealth he has increased the aim and purpose of his philanthropy. And no better proof could be given of the appreciation and gratitude of his countrymen than the general de-light with which his selection to re-present Bombay at the recent cut an-ation was received by all its cti-vens.

Girls often wonder if there are any men in real life who make love as it is done on the stage.
