She avers that her busband is worth $1,500,600 and has an income of $50,000 a year. The cross bill filed by Lemp asks a divorce and the custody of the child. The religious education of the boy was one of the main causes of difference between the comple, according to Mrs. Lemp's testimony. She asserted that she had had the boy haptized in the Reman Catholic Church, despite the father's wish to the contrary, but added she had told Lemo of her intention to have this ceremony performed.

Under cross-examination she was asked to identify an anti-mapfial contract by which she agreed to surrender all rights of religious instruction of any children born of the marriage to her hinsband. Mrs. Lemp acknowledged the signature of this document, but declared she never had seen it; that when she signature of this document, but the chard she meyer had seen it; that when she signature of this document, but declared she meyer had seen it; that when she signature was so folded as to

It was brought out that two ante-nuptial agreements had been entered into.

One bound Mrs. Lemp not to interfere in the religious training of any child until the offspring was seven years old, and the offspring was seven years old, and the other, signed in the yeas-nee of an archboshop of the Roman Catholic Church, bound Lemp not to object to the buptism of a child according to the rites of that organization.

Mrs. Lemp testified that her husband habitually carried a recolver and had displayed the weapon several times on slight provocation. For days at a time, and once for three months, he refused to speak to her, she said.

Attorneys for Lemp read a paper signed by him acknowledging the marriage, denying be had used abusive language, admitting he beft his wife October 13, 1906, and that it was his parpose never to live with her again.

The sextette work with speed from the rise of the curtain, and their routine begins where most other aerobatic acts leave off. The act is worked up to a rattling finish, and is a feature that is certainly well worth going a long way to see. Something out of the ordinary was promised in the amusing Irish sketch presented by Tom Nawn and company, and the act does not disappoint. It is one of the most original and successful laugh provokers seen here in a long time. The stage setting is unique, showing the interior of a museum filled with antiquities. The movel idea of the reincarnation is worked-out splendidly in this sketch. Miss Josephine Davis is a vivacious comedienne, who wins the audience the moment she steps upon the stage. She is daintiness personified, and enters heart and soul into her work. A sketch above the ordinary is that of Wilbur Mack, assisted by Nella Walker, a charming artist. Miss Walker in a Fluffy Ruffles creation is a delight to the eye. They work with spirit and dash, and keep the audience in constant good humor.

The presentation of "The Golden Butterfly" at the Grand to-morrow night is going to attract an immense audience, for nearly every seat in the house is sold. Theatregoers who have not already called for their seats on order are reminded that they are not held later than 6 o'clock on the evening of the performance. office. Many orders from surrounding towns have been received, and excursions have been arranged on all electric roads running into damilton for the accommodation at the large crowd of out of town people anvious to see this remarkable comic opera, to be at the Grand on Friday and Saturday. For is generally conceded that "The Merry Widow" is the most artistic, dainty and altogether captivating light opera produced in the last twenty-five years, Since its presentation in Vienna in January, 1906, it has been played with great success in every capital in Europe. At one time last winter it was running in eighteen European eities simultaneously. It is well on in its second year in London at the present time, and there is no apparent sign of an abatement of public interest. Its success has depended very largely upon its delightful music, which has been praised by the most captious critics of both hemispheres, and which has admittedly set a new standard to which composers of light opera nusic will have to adhere in the future. Its famous waltz, with its haunting and alluring undercurrent of passionate charm, has been played and sung in every corner of the world. Beautiful as is this selection, when it is played by itself, it fairly intoxicates with its subtle languor when one sees it danced in the second act.

ELGAR CHOIR.

ELGAR CHOIR.

The subscription lists for the first concert of the Elgar Choir on Wednesday evening next have been called in, and non-subscribers will not be able to secure seats until Tuesday morning at the Grand Opera House box office. There has been an over-subscription for seats at the second concert, on Feb. 18, and the choir executive looks to those who cannot get seats for that night to transfer their subscriptions to the first night concert, which will be a unique one in many ways. A very fine programme is being rehearsed by the choir, and there will also be several solos by Claude Cunningham, the New York baritone.

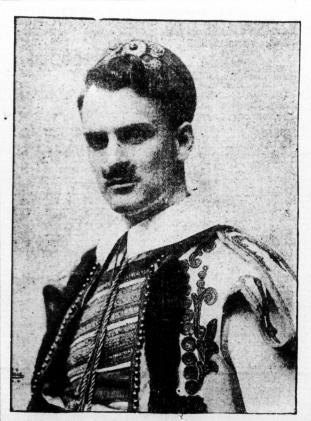

She is daintiness personified, and enters heart and soul into her work. A sketch above the ordinary is that of Wilbur Mack, assisted by Nella Walker, a charming artist. PADEREWSKI'S CAREER

If Paderewski's career as a virtuoso has been unique in the annals of music, so also may be called the preparation for that career. If the usual virtuoso, whatever his instrument may be, is not a "wonder child," at any rate, by the time he has entered his teens, he has had a solid primary training in his art and has a technique far beyond the reach of any but the most gifted amateurs. By the time he is twenty he is a full-fledged artist with his career made or irretrievably maimed. Paderewski himself tells us that when he was sixteen his technique was so inadequate that, he was always forced to make improvisations of his own in hard passages, hoping that none of his audience would be the wiser, and it was not until he was twenty-four that he set himself that he was twenty-four that he w whatever his instrument may be, is no would be the wiser, and it was not until he was twenty-four that he set himself seriously at the gigantic task of accomplishing in a few years in his maturity what others spend a lifetime on, and at a time when the fingers and wrists have the ductile flexibility of childhood, in 1884 Paderewski was a poor unknown musician whose threadbare clothes differed not one whit from the threadbare clothes of thousands of other poor, unknown musicians who swarm the streets of Berlin, Paris and Vienna. More than that, while known among his friends as a man of undoubted talent, few, if any, saw in him the making of a great pianist. Four years later Vienna, Berlin and Paris were talking of the marvelous Pole, the pupil of Leschetitsky, who was speaking a new message of beauty with his piano. Six years later London fought to attend his recitals, and seven years later began a series of triumphant tours.
