Ottawa Government has succeeded in obtaining a return of a considerable share of the money which one set of dishonest contractors had robbed it of, and it has now instituted suit to recover $143,000 stolen in connection with the Curran Bridge contract. Rosebery and the Lords.

Lord Rosebery made an attack on the House of Lords in his speech at Bradford Saturday evening last. The House, as it now existed, he said, was a mockery and an invitation to revolution. The House of Commons might vote bills till they were black in the face, but they must still go up, cap in hand, to the lords, and ask them to pass the bills. He favored the prin-ciple of a second chamber, saying that the temptation of absolute power was too great for any single person or body. He believed that the feeling of the country on this point was the same as his. (Shouts of "No" and cheers.) The issue was the greatest that had been presented since the country resisted the tyranny of Charles I. and James II., and involved a revision of the entire constitution. The country had not given its mandate to the government at the last election to deal with the house of lords. If it had, it had not given the government a sufficient majority. The government must, therefore, walk warily; it must first bring the commons into play. The government proposed to submit to parliament a resolution, the exact terms of which he would not state now, but of which he would not state now, but which would affirm the principle that the commons were in partnership with the house of lords, who were unmistakably the dominant partners. Such a resolution, which in the present temper of the house of commons would undoubtedly be passed, would represent the joint demand of the government and commons for a revision of the constitution, thus entering upon a new constitution, thus entering upon a new phase. Then the verdict of the country would be required, and he felt sure it would be as favorable as the verdict

The point is not wisely taken. There is nothing whatever contained in the Civil Service Act to bear out the Examiner's contention. On the contrary the Controller has full power to promote whom he pleases, having due regard to fitness for the position. See Sec. 42, C. S. act.

Regarding Mr Morau's efficiency as an officer, I have learned, that shortly after the death of the late Henry McKenna, in March last inspector McLaren recommend-March last, inspector McLaren recommended Mr. Moran for the position of surveyor, which is next in rank to that of Collector, in the following complimentary terms :

for the position, second to none in the Maritime Provinces. Has passed quali fying examination, can pass promotion examination." This has been put on file in the Controller's office at Ottawa. This is not the recommendation of a politician, but that of a man who is entirely disinterested, and who is also thoroughly competent to judge of an official's fitness for the position which he holds or to which be may be promoted. Besides when he recommends an officer for promotion, he does so solely in the interest of the Department, and not to serve political
