. "Turn to the Right.

I reflected; and the longer I did so the more teasible seemed the suggestion. A single word, and I might sweep from my path the man whose existence threatened mine; who would not meet me fairly, but, working against me darkly and treacherously, deserved no better treatment at my hands than that which a detected spy receives. He had wronged my mother; he would fain destroy my friends!

And, doubtless, I shall be blamed by some and ridiculed by more for indulging in acruples at such a time. But I have all my life been prejudiced against that form of underhand violence which I have heard old men contend came into fashion in our country in modern times, and which certainly seems to be alien from the French character. Without judging others too harshly, or saying that the poinard is never excusable-for then might some wrongs tione to women and the helpless go without remedy-I have set my face against its use as unworthy of a soldier. At the time, moreover, of which I am now writing the extent to which our enemies had lately resorted to it tended to fix this feeling with peculiar firmness in my mind; and, but for the very desperate dilemma in which I stood at the moment-and not I alone-I do not think I should have entertained Simon's proposal for a minute. As it was, I presently answered him in a way which left him in no doubt of my sentiments. "Simon, my friend," I said and I remember I was a little moved-"you have something still to learn, both as a soldier and a Huguenot. Neither the one nor the other strikes at the back.'

"But if he will not fight?" the lad re-torted rebelliously. "What then!" It was so clear that our adversary gained an unfair advantage in this way that I could an uniar advantage in this trib as an answer the question. I let it pass, therefore, and merely repeating my former

He promised reluctantly to do so, and, after spending some moments in thought, went out to learn whether the house was being watched.

injunction, bade Simon think out another

When he returned, his countenance wore so new an expression that I saw at once that something had happened. He did not meet my eye, however, and did not explain, but made as if he would go out again, with something of confusion in his manner. Befinally disappearing, however, he seemed to change his mind once more; for, marching up to where I stood eyeing him with the utmost astonishment, he stopped before me, and suddenly drawing out his hand, thrust something into mine.

'What is it, man !" I said mechanically. "Look!" he answered rudely, breaking silence for the first time. "You should know. Why ask me? What have I to do

I looked then, and saw that he had given me a knot of velvet precisely similar in shape, size, and material to that well-remembered one which had aided me so opportunely in my search for mademoiselle. This differed from that a little in color, but in nothing else, the fashion of the bow being the same, and one lappet bearing the initals "C. d. l. V," while the other had the words, "A moi." I gazed at it in wonder. "But, Simon," I said, "what does it mean? Where did you get it?"

Where should I get it?" he answered jealously. Then, seeming to recollect, he changed his tone. "A woman gave it to me in the street," he said.

I asked him what woman. "How should I know?" he answered, his eyes gleaming with anger. It was a woman an' owned up ter not gittin' a bite."

Was it Franchette?" I said sternly. "It might have been. II do not know," he

I concluded at first that mademoiselle and her escort had arrived in the outskirts of the city, and that Maignan had justified his reputation for discretion by sending in to learn from me whether the way was clear before he entered. In this notion I was partly confirmed and partly shaken by the accompanying message; which Simon, from whom every drop of information had to be dragged as blood from a stone, presently de-

"You are to meet the sender half an hour after sunset to-morrow evening," he said, on the Parvis at the north-east corner of the cathedral.'

'To-morrow evening?" "Yes, when else?" the lad answered ungraciously. "I said to-morrow evening."

I thought this strange. I could understand why Maignan should prefer to keep his charge outside the walls until he heard from me, but not why he should postpone a meeting so long. The message, too, seemed unnecessarily meagre, and I began to think Simon was still withholding something. "Was that all?" I asked him.

"Yes, all," he answered, "except-" "Except what?" I said sternly.
"Except that the woman showed me the gold token Mademoiselle de la Vire used to carry," he answered reluctantly, "and said, if you wanted further assurance that would satisfy you."

"Did you see the coin?" I cried eagerly. "To be sure," he answered.
"Then, mon Dieu!" I retorted, "either von are deceiving me, or the woman you aw deceived you. For mademoiselle has not got the token! I have it; here, in my possession! Now, do you still say you saw it man?"

"I saw one like it," he answered, trembling, his face damp. "That I will swear. And the woman told me what I have told you. And no more."
"Then it is clear," I answered, that mademoiselle has nothing to do with this, and is doubtless many a league away. This is one of M. de Bruhl's tricks. Fresnoy gave him the token he stole from me. And I told him the story of the velvet knot myself. This is a trap; and had I fallen into it, and gone to the Parvis to-morrow evening, I had never kept another assignation, my lad."

"Simon looked thoughtful. Presently he said, with a crestfallen air, "You were to go alone. The woman said that." Though I knew well why he had suppressed this item, I forebore to blame him. "What was the woman like?" I aid.

"She had very much of Franchette's figure," he answered. He could not go beyond that. Blinded by the idea that the woman was medemoiselle's attendant, and no one else, he had taken little heed of her, and could not even say for certain that she was not a man in woman's clothes.

I thought the matter over and discussed it with him; and was heartily minded to punish M. de Bruhl, if I could discover a way of turning his treacherous plot against himself. But the lack of any precise knowledge of his plans prevented me stirring in the matter; the more as I felt no certainty that I should be master of my actions when the time came.

Strange to say the discovery of this momement on the part of Bruhl, who had sedulously kept himself in the background of administering a fillip to my spirits; which the cold and unyielding pressure of the Jacobin had reduced to a low point. Here was something I could understand, resist, and guard against. The feeling that I had once more to do with a man of like aims and passions with myself quickly restored me to the use of my faculties; as I have heard a swordsman opposed to the powers of evil regains his vigor on finding nimself engaged with a mortal foe. Though I knew that the hours of grace were fast running to a close, and that on the morrow the priest would call for an answer, I experienced that evening an unreasonable lightness and cheerfulness. I retired to rest with confidence, and slept in comfort, supported in part, perhaps, by the assurance that in that room where my mother harm me. Upon Simon Fleix, on the other hand, the discovery that Bruhl was moving, and that eonsequently peril threatened us from a new quarter, had a different effect. He fell into a state of extreme excitement, and spent the evening and a great part of the night in walking restlessly up and down the room, wrestling with the fears and anxieties which beset us, and now talking fast to himself, now biting his nails in an agony of impatience. In vain I adjured him not to meet troubles halfway; or, pointing to the pallet which he occupied at the foot of my couch, bade him, if he cou'd not devise a way of escape, at least to let the matter rest till morning. He had no power to obey, but, tortured by the vivid anticipations which it was his nature to entertain, he continued to ramble to and fro in a fever of the nerves, and had no sooner lain down than he was up again. Remembering, however, how well he had borne himself on the night of mademoiselle's escape from Blois, I refrained from calling him a coward; and contented myself instead with the reflection that nothing sits worse on a fighting-

died her persecutor could have no power to man than too much knowledge-except, perhaps, a lively imagination. I thought it possible that mademoiselle might arrive next day before Father Antoine called to receive his answer. In this event I hoped to have the support of Maignan's experience. But the party did not arrive. I had to rely on myself and my own resources, and, this being so, de-termined to refuse the priest's offer, but in all other things to be guided by circum-
