"Lor' a mussy!" exclaims Jetty. "Well, if ever I did-" she speaks she let several plates, As she speaks she let several plates, which she has somehow tucked under one arm, slip. With a wonderful dexterity she catches them, and thus prevents a catastrophe; but Jetty puts the plates and cups together now on a big tray on one of the tables, and she points with her finger trimphantly towards the window. Above the lauristinus bushes and the great laurel trees a sight is to be seen which makes all the pupils and the French and German teachers gather in one excited throng in the center of the room. The little ones mount on the benches that they may behold the wonderful sight.

benches that they may behold the wonderful sight.

"Those kateful bushes!" exclaimed Helen Stevenson; "how I should like to burn them down—they hide everything! What in the world can have happened?"

Pretty Helen knew it not, but Tragedy and Comedy were near at hand. Comedy, decked out in ribbons, laughing and showing her white teeth; Tragedy, skulking, scowling, frowning, stained with that everlasting dye which the waves of all the wide seas can never wash away! the wide seas can never wash away!

CHAPTER XXVII. The spectacle which so deeply interested the French and German teachers, the twenty young lady pupils, Jetty the housemaid, and Sophia the upper house-maid (an individual who has not been introduced to the reader, seeing that she and the cook were absent from Coome Hill during the eventful Christmas holidays when our story began)—the sight which filled all these feminine eyes with wonder and admiration was the vision of two men servants in liveries of blue cloth two men servants in liveries of blue cloth and gold, the one perched high on the back of a magnificent equipage, the other on the box seat in front, from which elevated position he held the reins and looked straight before him with a truly imposing gravity of aspect.

The ceachman in front had a burly form, a round face, a gray beard; the footman behind was young and slim, with smooth cheeks and a simpering smile. This personage folded his arms across his chest in what he probably considered a superbly indifferent style. Jetty sighed as she contemplated him, beautiful in light blue and gold lace, calm, indolent, unattainable. unattainable.

"I should like to toss that concetted-leoking personage from his high seat in mid-air," said Helen Stevenson. "I wonder whose carriage it is. Those horrible bushes hide it and the people in it."

"Don't he just look 'andsome!" said Jetty to the upper housemaid. "Whose carriage is it, Sophia?"

Sophia had opened the hall door and had admitted a lady visitor to the drawing room, where the said visitor now sat with Miss Phillipson—Miss Phillipson disturbed at her private tea, and not at all expecting a stranger so late in the day. Sophia was a London young woman, Sophia was a London young woman, only newly arrived in country quarters. Somehow she had missed the name. She had taken a card from the lady before showing her into the drawing room, then she had given this card to Miss Phillip-son. She had forgotten the name. son. She had forgotten the name. "It isn't the Chase livery, is it, Elsie?" asked one of the pupils.

"Oh, no-the Chase livery is dark-quite

What kind of lady did you admit, She was young, miss, and very stout she was young, miss, and very stout and short, and she was dressed in green velvet most splendid!" replied Sophia. "It's Miss Pickles Stanly!" cried Helen clapping her hands. "What in the world brings here here this fine day? Elsic, can she be come to look you up, to com-plain of your attracting her darling, adorable Owen's attention? Oh, what a magnificent piece of fun! I wonder what-Can't you fancy her rubbing her hands, which always have chilbiains and black mittens, and assuring Miss Pickles Stanly that she had always exercise the strictest surveillance; but that young its contact. is certainly a sort of attractiveness about Miss Carew, but that she herself is at a loss to imagine what it can be? And then she will look at Miss Pickles Stanly exactly as if she wouldn't be a bit surprised if all the crowned heads in Europe lost their wits for her sweet sake!"

Elsie felt her heart beating wildly against her side. Could Miss Stanly know of that chance meeting in the wood? Lord Hammond had threatened to go straight to her and tell her whore to go straight to her and tell her what had happened. Had he gone after she had left those two angry young men in the coppiee? Perhaps he had even overheard Elsie tell Owen that she loved him green velvet gown "most splendid "You look as guilty as if you know the secret of a murder," said flippant Helen, lightly, "and could tell us where to find hightly, "and could tell us where to hind the body packed away under a heap of the body packed away under a heap of the body packed away continued Miss Elsie that evening.

Elsie shrank and shuddered, she knew not why. Cruel Lord Hammond, if he had done all this mischief in his wicked door of the schoolroom widely, and there entered first little slim, prim Miss Phillipson, and next Rosa Stanly short, stout, gorgeous in green Lyons velvet, her rather large head crowned with an immense Henry the Second hat of green velvet, adorned with a great white plume. Rosa was plotted. a great white plume. Rosa was plain, as we all know; she was sallow and swarthy, and she squinted; but there was a merry twinkle in her ugly little eyes; her thick twinkle in her ugly little eyes; her thick lips parted in a good-tempered smile, and her white teeth gleamed. She came up to Elsie and extended her hands, encased in green kid gloves.

"So glad to find you are well not not married to an Irishman who wants to set the world in a blaze. I heard only yesterday that you were at school again, and not married or even engaged." nd not married or even engaged."
Rosa chuckled. Evidently Lord Hammond had told her nothing as yet of meeting in the wood. She looked su-premely happy, but she was fatter than ever, Elsie thought. Miss Stanly had thrown her arms round Elsie by this time and had kissed her on the cheek. Elsie could not return the embrace.

Poer Miss Staply, she had given her heart, and she was about to give herself and her great fortune to a man who would only repay her in the false coin of a counterfeit love. All Lord Hammond's bitter words re-turned upon Elsie's memory with renewturned upon Elsie's memory with renew-ed force, with a sharper sting, when she looked in poor Rosa's kind, unconscious face. Elsie was a lady, however, and if her manner was constrained towards Miss Stanly, it was very courteous and "It is so kind of you to remember me-come and see me," she said. Rosa laughed.

Rosa laughed.
"I have thought of you again and again. Fancy your having to leave that delightful party at Charteris and to go away, summoned by a false telegram! Whatever was it done for? Some political that the second of the Whatever was it done for? Some political rubbish, I suppose. I am so glad that you are not mixed up with it. Well, so these young ladies have been primrosing," looking round on the group of smilling faces. "I have asked Miss Phillipson to bring the whole school, teachers and all, to Bracebridge Hall on Easter Monday. I hear you don't go away until Whitsundide this year, so that we must have you spend the day at Bracebridge. If it is werm we will lunch in a tent. We shall have a dance in the evening, and I have asked lots of gentlemen, and I shall send you all back in two wagon-

I will send her back on Thursday morning in the carriage in time for the drawing class, which Miss Phillipson has given leave. I had to begin at eleven on Thursday. And Miss Phillipson has given leave. I had to beg very hard; but she has given leave."

Of the face of a healthful woman with the face of one who is sick proves that quite often a sad face is a sick face. Many a woman has credit for a sunny disposition who would soon be sad of face and irritable of temper if she had to endure the womanly ills which many of her sex have borne for years.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription cures the diseases which are the source of so much pain and suffering to women. It establishes regularity, dries debilitating drains, heals inflammation and ulceration and cures female weakness.

Mrs. Cornelia Henson, of Coalton, Boyd Co., Ky., writes: "In October 1889 I gave birth to a baby and the treatment I received at the hands of the midwife left me with falling of the uterus. I had no health to speak of for three years. I had another baby which was the third child. My health began to fail and I found myself completely worn out. I had so many pains and aches my life was a burden to me and also to all the family, for I was nervous and cross and I could not sleep. Had four doctors come to see me but at has found I was slowly dying. The doctors said I had liver, hung and uterine trouble. I was in bed for months and when I did get up I doctors said I had liver, hing and uterine frouble. I was in bed for months and when I did get up I was a sight to behold. I looked like a corpse walking about. I commenced to take Doctor Pierce's Favorite Prescription, 'Golden Medical Discovery' and 'Pellets,' and ever since then I have been a well woman. I have suffered all a woman could suffer at my mouthly period and woman could suffer at my monthly period until since I began the use of Dr. Plerce's medicines, but now I can say I have no pain. The dark circles around my eyes are going away and I feel better in every way. My cheeks are red and my akin is white, but before it was as yellow as saffren."

BASEBALL. THE MAGNATES' MEETING.

Leagues wound up the business of the convention The first business taken up was the report of the national board of arbitration. In the matter of the protest made by the Portland (Oregon) club against the Buffalo club for the services of Players
Newham and Wiley, who are on the reserve list of both teams, the Buffalo management was directed to show cause why the men should not be returned to Portland Eert Schills who was taken by the land. Bert Schills, who was taken by the Dayton club from Seattle, was ordered to return to the Seattle club. The appli-cation of M. A. Hickey to be released from Lowell was denied. Secretary Farrell was ordered to rigidly investigate the charge made by the Waterbury club for charge made by the Waterbury club for George Prentice, who, it was charged, umpired for Waterbury and played with another club last season under an as-sumed name. Subsequently, it is charged, he signed with the Boston American League team. The claim made by Mr. Stroebel, of Toledo, against Players Gates and Arthur was allowed, and the players were ordered to pay Mr. Stroebel the money he advanced them. The claim made by the Rock Island club for the services of Rube Ward was laid over. Secretary Farrell was instructed to notify all clubs who have more than 14 players on their reserve list that the number must be reduced to comply with the new national agreement. The board also passed a rule to the effect that the release of no players from a club shall be valid unless the release is signed by the president of the releasing club. A rule was also passed making it necessary to file the names of all signed players with the secretary of the N. A. P. B. B. L. A resolution was passed making the farming out of players punishable. The penalty is to be fixed by the national board, A rule was enacted making it compulsory for each club to pay its protection fee before January of each year. The magnates also adopted a form of ontract for all the various leagues in the organization. The new contract is almost identical with the old form used in the National League. It was decided to allow each league to choose its own to allow each league to choose its own ball. It was also decided that Class A will include the Eastern and Western Leagues. ## ACQUITTED!

Brantford's Murder Trial Comes to a Close.

The Jury Took Five Hours to Reach a Decision-Murder in Montreal.

Brantford, Ont., Oct. 28.-Mrs. White, on trial for the murder of her husband, was crying bitterly as she entered the court room Saturday morning, and during the greater part of the judge's address her handkerchief covered her face. The court room was filled when Chief Justice Sir William Meredith resumed his address, and later on in the morning it became crowded to its utmost capacity.

His lordship's address was impar-tial. In concluding, he said two very important facts that should be considered were: "Did the accused in the box tell the truth in all cases?" and "Was there a motive in the act?" The evidence showed that there had been a financial motive in connection with life insurance. Fut it had been proven that the policy did not leave the hands of the company, and as a mater of law there was no obligation for the company to pay the money, as a result. The crown, however, argued that the accused believed that the policy was valid and that she would reserve she would receive the money in case her husband's death. What was in the mind of the prisoner as to this was a question for the jury to decide. The defense put in the theory that accused was well aware of the fact that the policy would not be in force until she paid the first premium. If such was the fact, it was a strong point in favor of the woman. His lordship said he had gone over the case very carefully for the benefit of the jury, which he thought had listened attentively and thoroughly understood the case. They held the scales of justice, and they owed it as a duty to society that those scales should not be turned against society. They should not let any feeling of sentiment that the prisoner was a woman change their judgment. They should carefully consider the evidence, and if there was the slightest doubt, the prisoner at the bar should receive the benefit of that doubt. They should unflinchingly discharge their duty, and he left the case entirely in their hands do justice in either case.

At 11:20 the jury retired to decide upon a verdict, and did not return until 4 p.m. Five minutes later the judge took his seat, and after the jury had answered to their names, the judge asked if they had arrived at a deciasked if they had arrived at a deci-

KILLED WIFE AND HIMSELF. Chicago, Oct. 28.—Because he was denied the sight of his two little children, James Kennedy, a laborer, yesterday murdered his wife and killed himself. They were married twelve years ago, out quarreled recently and separated. Kennedy called on his wife yesterday and asked to see the children. Fearing that he meant to take them away from her, she told him that they had gone to church. In a few minutes, however, when they heard their father's voice, they came running from a bedroom, where they had been hidden by their mother. This enraged Kennedy. pulling out a revolver, he fired three shots at his wife, killing her. He then turned the revolver on himself, and when found was dead.

FIENDISH MURDER IN MON-TREAL. Montreal, Oct. 27. — Tobie Hanson, Dane, 32 years old, is locked up in the Westmount police cells for brutal murder committed last night. Hanson met a lad about 12 years old named Samuel McCarotte, the son of Samuel McCarotte, one of the best known citizens of Montreal, on the street near his father's home at Westmount. He followed the lad into some fields, and then deliberately knocked the boy down and put an end to the boy's life by cutting his throat. Hanson's explanation is that he wanted money, but all he got was a few cents, which the poor little lad had on him. Hanson, after killing the lad, threw his body on a pile of stones and proceeded on his The boy's body was found a few hours afterwards, but nothing was known as to how he came by his death until this morning, when Hanson walked into Montreal police headquarters, and gave himself up. He was handed over the Westmount police. stated he had only been in the country a few menths, and that he had worked for some time at the Chateau Frontenac.
