The Husband Who Can't Take a Night Off-The Orphan Girl Whose Uncle Makes Love to Her-The Girl Who Doesn't Allow Good Night Kissing.

Dear Miss Dix—I have been married two years, and my wife and I have many disputes because I think that I should have one night a week off. She will not hear to this, and during my entire married life I have never gone out by myself. Even a servant has one day off. Don't you think a husband is entitled to that much liberty? CHARLES S.

Answer:

I certainly do, Charles, and if I were you I would take it, no matter how big a domestic rumpus it kicked up. There is no virtue in submitting to tyranny, and the more you give in to the despot on the hearth the more you will have to give in, until the time will come when you won't even dare to call your soul your own.

Of course, when I say that you are entitled to an evening off, I an presuming that you are going t spend it like a gentleman. If are going to use it to chase a ski or get drunk or gamble away mon ou can't afford, then your wife justified in locking you up in yo prison cell.

But if you just want to go to your club, or your lodge, or to a show, or have some real man-talk with men, or just get off by yourself and do as you darn please for a few hours, without having to consider anybody else's tastes and desires—and we all get like that sometimes-why, then your wife is most unreasonable to deny you this pleasure.

It is a pity that women can't understand that life is just as much grind for men as it is for them, and that men need relaxation and pleas and to have their thoughts turned into different directions just as much they do, and that the only possible time a busy man can get this relaxa is at night, for he is at his work all day

It is a pity that a woman has not sense enough to know that the more she forbids her husbands to go out in the evening the more he desires to go, and the tighter she tries to nail him a home the more he hates home and domesticity. Make a man free to go when he pleases and he stays. Bar the door, and he climb over the transom. For that is the contrariness of human natu good. But play fair with the wife. Tell her that she may also take off a few days. The cast, with choruses, includes almost 150 people. At the close of the meeting the evening was else that diverts her. Home would be a cheerier place if both husband and wife spent

My advice is to tell your aunt the whole story, and get her to send ; to some place of safety. She is bound to soon sense her husband's attitu loward you, and the shock of finding out that you, to whom she has be kind and good, have acted traitorously toward her will be far greater th knowing that her own husband has been false to her and to every principal

This young man does not believe that there are any girls who do n allow kissing, and he feels that I am stringing him, or trying to play the expect to kiss me? Also, why should I tell him whether or not I care for him, just to satisfy his vanity? Tell me what to do about this fellow, a ne has not called for some time, and I do miss him. SAD BLONDIE, Answer: I think you are exactly right not to kiss the young man. A chap is a good deal of a cad who makes a girl pay for his attentions by doing a thing that both he and she know brushes the down from the peach. For a girl who lets every man kiss her and paw her gets to be a shopworn article with none of the delicate sen-sibilities, none of the freshness and innocence that should belong to maidenhood. If I were a girl, I would rather pay out my good, hard money for theatre tickets and automobile rides than to pay for them with kisses.

The only man who has a right to expect a woman to kiss him or tel him that she loves him is the one who has asked her to be his wife. Appar ently this chap has not popped the question. He wants you to kiss him and to give him your heart for the poor price of taking you out a few times which would be a bad bargain on your part.

Let him go. He isn't worth worrying over. And of one thing you may be sure. You may have lost his society, but you have won his respect, and if he had any intention whatever of proposing to you, your attitude will bring him to the point, for the unkissed girl is the kind of a wife that every man would like to have.
