Talesman J. A. Robertson, the very first man called, qualified in a canter for the vacancy created by the seventeenth peremptory challenge and the defense at once challenged Juror Harmon Cox, the veteran, whom it tried so hard to disqualify on Monday last. This made the ninth challenge used by the defence. After three failures, H. F. Messacar successfully withstood the fire of questions from both sides, and was accepted for the place. Then the court finally dealt with Juror Tourtellotte, who is opposed to capture of the place of the court of the the fire of questions from both sides, and was accepted for the place.
