The present state of the law in Ontario, it is stated, has decided tendency to restrict credit. It begets a sense of insecurity in all parties engaged in trade and commerce, and is especially objectionable because it makes no provision for summarily attaching an insololvent or absconding debtor's estate and placing it under the control of the creditor ns from other boards of trade and

> THE RIVER OF DEATH. Joaquin Miller's Interesting and Graphi Description of the Saguenay.

I had long heard, as many of you have n doubt, of a dark and mysterious river away to the northeast of Quebec, called by many the "river of death." And I resolved to visit it, since it is very easy of access, and the two hundred miles of travel one round of rest and pleasure on board of spacious steamers. . . A dozen or so of us were Americans, mainly from the eastern tates, induced here by Mr. Howells' descriptions of the weird "Styx"; as he names the dark and silent Saguenay in his brilliant "Chance Acquaintance." Here we met s dozen or so Englishmen from over the sea some journalists from almost anywhere like myself and then forty or fifty native English-Canadians. We notice French-Canadians travel but little, save in the way of making pilgrimages to the little shrines and churches that here and there bless the shore of this beloved river.

Fifty miles further on is Murray bay, the Newport of Canada. A pretty place, peaceful, restful, the air full of ozone, and and the name of malaria unknown to the inhabitants. I find I can get a furnished cottage here for one hundred dollars for the season, while it would cost me fully one thousand in Long Branch, or Newport; living proportionate: cabs tifty cents and one dollar a day. The society: good moral and honest. And at least, I think, cultivated, if not wealthy. The diversions are fishing and shooting and hunting. The but less important points.

This river of death, or Saguenay is bottomless. You might, if possible, drain the St. Lawrence river dry says Mr. LeMoine, the Canadian authority, and yet this dark still river would be able to float the Great Eastern and all her majesty's ships of the line. "A bottomless river," sounds strangely new, indeed were it not so, I should not trouble you or myself to mention it. But this river is thus tar unfathomed. It is full of counter-currents, swift, perilous in th

Then as we rounded another weary and eternal cape of overhanging granite, in its few frightened and torn trees, the dark way would open before us. And then ten, twenty, thirty miles more of silence, gloom, river of death. No sound. No sign of life is here. Summer or winter spring time or autumn, all seasons alike, no bird, no beast, not even the smallest insect, save only a possible heusefly that may harbor in the steamboat and so be brought with you, is ever seen here. This is literally the river of death. I know no spot like it on the face of this earth. Our deserts with their owls, horn-toads, prairie dogs and rattlesnakes, are populous in comparison. And yet this awful absence of all kinds of life cannot be due to the waters. They are fa-mous for fi h of the best kind. The air is certainly delicious. But all this vast river's shore is as empty of life as when "darkness was upon the face of the earth." And no man has settled here. For nearl one hundred miles not a sign of man is seen. You seem to be a sort of Columbus, as if no man had ever been here before you. At every turn of a great granite cape these lines rhymed incessantly in my ears:

"We were the first that ever burst Upon that silent sea."

An hour past midnight and we neared the central object of the journey, Cape Trinity, a granite wall of about two thousand feet, which in places literally overhangs the which in places literally overhangs the ship. Our captain laid the vessel closely against the monolyth, and for a momen ested there. We seemed so small. The great steamer was as a little toy, held out there in the hollow of God's hand.

Here, turning about we saw the glorious sun burst suddenly and in full splendor over this amber river, which now in the full light looked as tawny as the desert
