STUDENT LIFE.

The following summaries of the characteristic traits and important events in the lives of half the graduating class, done by a fellow-student, will, we believe, prove interesting as well to many outside readers of the Journal as to students. Unless the writer is annihilated in the meantime, the remaining nine of the noble eighteen will be "kodakized" during the ensuing month, and the result presented to our readers.

Brenner, W.—An Ottawa man of "galvanic" temperament, reminds one of Traddles in David Copperfield. Many a time during his college course did Brenner's clean-cut and caustic sentences put life into a spiritless debate. Took a fair degree at McGill and won a scholarship in his First Year Theology. Is never late at breakfast.

Cleland, J. A.—A tall, handsome Irishman, of genial manners. Is a fluent and graceful speaker. Took the Balfour Scholarship and the English Reading Prize last session. Affects checkered cloth and is said to be in love with Uncle Sam's way of doing things.

Dseronian, H.—A resourceful, plucky Oriental. Is as much one of us as if "to the manor born." Does not mind a "sawking" the least bit. Dseronian will do.

Ervine, Jas.—Another elongated specimen of the sons of Erin. Came here from London, England, where he obtained his preparatory training. Combines in himself the shyness of the Saxon with the ardour of the Celt. Is said to sigh for the ould sod still.

Graham, Angus.—Gold Medalist in Philosophy, scholar in Theology, Past Treasurer of the Journal, Representative in Knox College debate, President of the Literary Society, etc.,
