

service in Virginia could hardly have been devised. What gives peculiar interest to the Confederate soldier's dress is the individual history which attaches to each separate article. From the blanket he sleeps on to the cartridge he shoots with, almost everything has been appropriated from the enemy at one time or another. This rifle was exchanged for the old-fashioned lock on the field of Manassas; that canteen was taken at Shiloh; the grey mare yonder, with McGowan's saddle, was captured in the cavalry charge at Williamsburg; these boots were taken out of the Yankee stores at Winchester. The negro who is following with the sloop and the extra blanket, is following with his master, has consulted comfort being wiser than his master, and prevailed upon himself to rather than prejudice, and considered that to wear a Yankee uniform, in consideration that the former proprietor was a full colonel. Entire batteries pass down the road with "U.S." in prominent white letters on the caissons. It is no exaggeration to say that a great part of the Confederate army have been equipped at the expense of the United States. Flint locks and fowling pieces have been exchanged for good Minnie rifles. There was however still so great a want of small arms, that a considerable part of the army were armed with a smooth-bore of home manufacture, loaded with a ball and three buck-shot. This deficiency has, perhaps, not been altogether a disadvantage, inasmuch as the necessity of getting to closer quarters, in order to put themselves on an equality with their opponents, has in no small degree produced amongst the Confederates that habit of closing with the enemy which has proved so inconvenient to the Northern troops. It seems inconceivable until witnessed, that the same man who is seen marching, or rather carelessly lounging, along the road in loose and slovenly array, should, at the sound of the first shell that whistles overhead, form up at the words of their officers, with ease and rapidly, into a line so close and compact, that the sight of it would give joy to a martyr's heart. The soldiers of the Southern army were scrambled together in a few months, and the greater part of them never have gone through any regular course of drill, and are, therefore, wanting in the smartness and precision which distinguishes good troops in Europe. Men take off their hats instead of saluting; orders are given in a loose conversational tone, and the gunner in a battery will suggest an opinion to the captain. But though, for these reasons, the troops might not be presentable on parade, a year's hard service has rendered them efficient for the field. The very high standard of individual intelligence, moreover, supplies the want of order in a great measure. Things which, in other armies, if not done on strict rule, would be altogether neglected, somehow "get themselves done" in this volunteer army. Nevertheless—and it may be mentioned as a hint to our own volunteers—the want of strict organization is greatly felt, and more so, on the march than on the field. The great strength and power of the Southern army lies in the individual resolution of the men. Every private feels a determination, not only to carry his regiment through the fight, but to see his country through the war. Boys of 15 may be seen by the side of gray-haired men. Men who could not obtain arms have been known to fall in the rear rank, and go into action on the chance of picking up a musket on the first opportunity. It has been described how, at the commencement of the war, all the wealthiest men crowded into the ranks; there has been time for the first enthusiasm to wear away, and yet there are no signs of any finching from the contest. Scores of names could be mentioned of men who, after having served out their first enlistment (twelve months), spent a week with their relations, and then returned to volunteer for three years for the war. Indeed, no man who shrunk from the war could ever again venture to address a lady.—Blackwood's Magazine.

The Alabama is represented by the Captains of the vessels captured by her as a very superior vessel for the purpose, being as fast under canvas as ordinary vessels under steam. All her captures have hitherto been made without resorting to steam power; the difficulty of replacing her coal inducing the greatest economy in the use of it. She destroyed her captures at night, the light of the burning vessel acting as a decoy to others in the neighbourhood. The value of the vessels she is already known to have destroyed is estimated at $1,500,000.

'Old Abe' occasionally utters a good thing in that dry caustic way which characterizes Western men. The following is his last—A suppliant for office, of more than ordinary pretensions, called upon him lately, and presuming on the activity he had shown on Mr. Lincoln's behalf during the election that raised him to the chief magistracy, asserted, as a reason why the office he desired should be given to him, that he had made his President. "You made me President, did you?" said Mr. Lincoln, with a twinkle of his eye. "I think I did," said the applicant. "Then a precious mess you've got me into, that's all," replied Mr. Lincoln, and closed the discussion.

PETITIONS.—Petitions to be presented to the legislature of any State by those who are nearly out of business. From a bankrupt husband—Praying that a bill might be passed to restrain his wife from the use of more than six. From a jealous husband—Praying that it might be made felony for a bachelor to ask a married lady to dance. From a judgy husband—For an act to declare the rearing of parrots and lap dogs a capital crime. From a distracted husband—For an act to prohibit the squalling of the babies. From an old maid—To make marriage compulsory at a certain age—to extend to both sexes. From a young lady—Protesting against the length to which moustaches have grown of late.
