

FRATERNAL LIFE INSURANCE

TO VERY few is it given to have all the Life Insurance which they feel will be adequate for the protection of their loved ones should they be taken away. Particularly is this the case with men in their younger years when they are building up a home, it may be as the support of widowed mother or of sisters or in hopeful upgrowth with the dear one of their choice and the fledglings which cluster at their knees. Where the calls for maintenance are so many there is often but little left to be put away for sickness or for sorrow's days. At such times it is that the beneficence of Fraternal Insurance with its easy monthly payments comes to bring confidence and happiness into the home, that sense of rest which quiets the pillow of the weary worker with the knowledge that, out of his personal savings, he has provided for his dear ones should the daylight never come again. Fraternal Insurance by its co-operation of friend with friend, of brother with brother, each for the other's good, has brought all this about. Well might Theodore Roosevelt, the President of the United States, say:

"The Fraternal Societies are in my opinion one of the greatest powers for good government and the protection of the home that we have in the country. This government will endure just so long as we protect the great interests represented by the Fraternal Orders."

No man with such opportunities at his hand for moderate premiums, payable monthly, ought to be for a day without Life Insurance.

But even in after years when comfort has been gained by carefulness or by success, when the account in the Bank has
