THE NATIONAL PARTY COMING.

The signs are pointing to a new party in Canada. It will not spring, completely armed, from the head of any one, but it will grow into shape and develop rapidly.

It will be a new party, not a third party. The friends of the present condition of affairs speak of the two existing parties as sufficient; and men and papers like Goldwin Smith and The Weekly Sun speak of a third party as a party independent of the other two and regulative of both of them—a party that does not seek to govern, but swings from one to the other as public welfare suggests. A so-called third party is not a party in fact, it is a brake on parties.

But the party that we see coming will be a new party dealing with new issues from new standpoints, and willing to assume, bound to assume the responsibility of governing the country.

It will deal with the issues that are of to-day notably the relation of corporations and trusts and great combinations of capital with the public; it will deal with public franchises and public utilities from the point of view of the people who use them and who want to use them, rather than from the point of view of those who have control of them. It will deal with life insurance from a new standpoint: how to make it safe, cheap and certain, and a sure provision to the widow and orphan, not how immense reserves can be accumulated for financial magnates to handle to their own advantage. It will tackle transportation from the point of view of those who pay the rates rather than from the point of view of those who collect them. It will have to deal with taxation from the standpoint of those who hold the most of this world's goods should pay most of the public charges. It will encourage the distribution of wealth rather than its accumulation. It will be a people's party, it will be a national party, indeed we imagine that it will be called the National party. It will deal with the relations between Canada and the mother country on newer and later lines: from the standpoint of co-equals, of partners, not of superior and inferior. It will be a party that thinks and a party that does The great Republican party of the United States came into existence as a new party, as a party of principle, as a party of action. It was not a party merely of criticism. Its beginning is found in the Free Soil party, composed of men of independent anti-slavery views, who for four presidential campaigns had been organized, with no near hope of success, but to give expression to their deep personal convictions. It had long been held up to odium as a band "of abolitionists," the all its members were not abolitionists. This small body of anti-slavery veterans grew steadily and came to the front. Hitherto its aims had appeared Utopian. Now, (on the repeal of the Missouri compromise) combining wisdom with opportunity, it advocated a simple return to the ancient faith and landmarks. It labored specially to bring about the dissolution of the old party organizations, and the foundation of a new one based upon the party organizations and the foundation of a new one, based upon the general policy of resisting the extension of slavery. Party disintegration was slow, men were reluctant to adapdon their old-time principles and associations The real and effective gain was the more or less thoroalliance of the Whig party and the Free Soil party of the United States. The Whigs of the south were driven into division, the pro-slavery men going over to the Democratic camp. The Free Soilers and the anti-slavery Whigs, or those who stood by the constitution and opposed the extension of slavery, gradually merged into the new Republican party. But the refusal of the Whigs in many states to surrender their name and organization and more agreealth. ganization, and more especially the abrupt appearance of the "know nothings" on the field of parties retarded the general coalition between the Whigs and the Free Soilers, which so many influences favored Lincoln was an anti-slavery Whig, but joined the Republican party on its organization in 1856, speaking at the Bloomington convention on May 29. In 1856, Pitt nominated Tramont for president Lincoln taking an active part 1856 Pitt nominated Tremont for president, Lincoln taking an active part in the campaign. Buchanan, Democratic, was elected, Tremont standing next. The Whig party had now disappeared, the Republican party took its place, and in 1860 elected Lincoln as its first president...

Thus launched, the Republican party filled a great mission. It was a new party, not a third party. It abelished slavery, it made the union greater than one or more of its states, it put into force the policy of protection, and it undertook the government of the country, as well as settled a great rebellion. It is still alive to-day, tho it does not seem to be able, notwithstanding the efforts of its chief, Theodore Roosevelt, to grapple with the corporation, which also threatens this country.

What took place, then in regard to the Republican will likely take.

What took place then in regard to the Republican will likely take what fool blace then in regard to the Republican will have a relace here in Canada on these new issues that are coming up. One or other or both of the two old parties will disappear or merge in a new organization. And the new organization by reason of its principles will eventually carry the country. Such a party must have principles, organization, and be prepared to assume the responsibilities of querining the country. A mere third party may have none of these qualities. But the new National Party will have them all.

Niagara Falls, N.Y., Oct. 12.-(Special.)-John Hogoday and his wife, Elizabeth, an aged couple, are dead, as the result of arsenic poisoning, and their 13-year-old grandson is not expected to live. They ate biscuits in which arsenic had been used in miswhich arsenic had been used in mistake for baking powder.

Ine Holliday family lives on the Packard Road, about two and a half miles east of the Echota suburb. This morning Mrs. Holliday and her husband arose early. Mrs. Holliday stated she would have to bake some biscuits before breaktast, and while her husband did some chores about the bouse she did some chores about the house she prepared them. When the old couple were ready to eat the grandson came down stairs and took a place at the table with them. In a few minutes Mrs. Holliday remarked that the biscuits seemed to burn her mouth.

Holliday remarked that the biscuits seemed to burn her mouth.

Then a terrible thought struck her and she arose from the table and hurried into the pantry.

"I wonder if I put arsenic into those biscuits instead of baking powder," she said. At the same moment the grandson was taken ill. The others in the house were aroused and they sent a hurry call for Dr. Gillick. The physician recognized the symptoms of arsenic poisoning and called Dr. C. E. Campbell. The two physicians worked steadily over the patients, but in spite of their efforts Holliday passed away at 1 o'clock in the afternoon and his wife died at 4 o'clock. The boy is still alive, but far from being out of dauger. Coroner Scott was summoned and obtained a statement from the boy, which is substantially the story as given above. The boy says the arseniq was kept in an old baking powder can and his grandmother mistook it for baking powder.

Holliday was 70 years, 11 months and 9 days old, and his wife was 70 years old. In the Holliday home were four adults and six children, and that none of the others were poisoned is explained by the fact that they did not arise early enough to eat breakfast with the old folks and the grandson.

Coroner Scott will hold an inquest in the cases of Mr. and Mrs. Holliday on Monday night of next week.
