THE APPLE SALES

The selling of one's products from the farm is half the battle. A man may raise good shorthorns as ever stood on feet; he may have exact duplicates of Baron's Pride, Wild Fire or Hamiltonian, yet fail to get a figure for him. Many a breeder has failed in the racebecause he was a poor salesman.

It is one thing to produce, another thing to prepare or manufacture, and still another proposition to get the consumer to purchase. In mercantile life these different phases of business are entrusted to separate men with their special facilities for work. But on the farm production, manufacture and sale must be conducted by the farmer himself. Thus the successful farmer is, at once, an intelligent producer, a skilful manufacturer and a strenuous sales-

It is thus that our farm lads are nurtured in the cradle of greatness. They take to all the forms of business as a duck does to water. But the hard knocks they get when up against the astute, polished world make many prise. Long life among your farm suspicious and small-minded.

To offset this the tarmer must be continually alert to the possibilities of his position and to the capabilities of his fertile and healthy brain. Let him not take stones for bread nor sell his birthright for a mess of cider apple

In the selling of the apple crop, there is much to learn, and all to gain. Our orchards do not pay us enough, not because they are unproductive, for we have the apples and the quality. We do not know how to present our product so as to tempt the consumer to go down for a very long time to come. pay us a higher price. We are large. He easily pocketed $100 that otherwise would have gone into the dealer's pouch. Who deserves that $100? Is it not the farmer and producer? Let our farmers get into the bandwagon now.

This Canadian blue grass is generally regarded as of much less value than the other species on account of its incumbent habit, since it is difficult to cut it for hay. For pasture it is nearly as good, but still it must be regarded as ranking below the famous Kentucky grass. Canadian blue grass is more hardy when young, and so it is easier to get a good stand of it."

It is always interesting to listen to the discussions of our Canadian na-tural verdure. Farmers ought to know more about these things.
