Mr. Chairman and Gentlemen: It is a pleasure for me to be here this evening. I thank you for the manner in which you have received the toast of the Parliament of Canada and the Government of the Dominion. But before saying a word on the theme suggested by that toast, let me make an observation or two in reference to the prime minister of Ontario, the gentleman who has well earned the recognition which you have this evening given to his services. Mr. Hardy has long devoted himself to the public services of this province. He has been assiduous in the discharge of the duties which he has undertaken. He, for a quarter of a century, has served under the leadership of Sir Oliver Mowat; and since the withdrawal of Sir Oliver from the political arena, the command which he on Mr. Hardy. I think I might say to him what was said of old to one who succeeded to the place of his chief: Be courageous, be strong, and do that which is of the first consequence in the public interest. There is much to do in this province. Our whole country is new. The oldest of the provinces is capable of indefinite expansion in agriculture. in mining, in commerce, and in manufactures. As a citizen I feel a special interest in the prosperity of this province. As a Liberal, I am intensely interested, as all reformers are, in the prosperity of this city. I would like to see it maintain its true place in the commercial growth of the country, for stagnation is incompatible with the spirit of Liberalism, and with accelerated progress, would come increased sympathy with Liberal and increased support principles. Reform candidates. From my point of view there are a few great problems calling for serious consideration and for satisfactory solution, at the hands of our friends, to whom is confided the government of the province. How are we to keep our farmers' sons, who want more elbow-room, in the country, and induce them to take up those portions of the province now unoccupied, and which are fit for the purposes of agriculture; and how are we to reconcile a high standard of education, and a wide diffusion of knowledge, with the ordinary industrial pursuits of our people? In my opinion, in these inquiries very great public interests are involved; for I do not think anyone will deny that in a country having several millions of square miles of territory, and not m sons on the square mile devoted to agriculture, that the increase of our agricultural population, and the occupation and cultivation of the lands lying waste that are suitable to agriculture, are of paramount importance. In these waste lands nature herself has provided an unlimited supply of capital, ready to be employed in the production of wealth by the industry of man. If, in Ontario, you could persuade but fifty young men from each county to go every year into our northern regions, where there is abundance of material for buildings, abundance of pure water and plenty of fish, and where the only capital absolutely, necessary is an axe, a few tools, and a year's supply of food and clothing, to begin life, each, on his own behalf, I am perfectly sure that the majority of those with limited means, would be much better off at the end of ten years, than in going to the lumber woods of Michigan, or to the cities of the neighboring republic. in these questions, Toronto is specially interested. But this by the way. Now. with regard to the Dominion Government, I think everyone will admit that the material interests of the ropulation

After confederation the wave which carried the commerce and industry forward attained its greatest elevation in 1873, when it began to subside. The government of Mr. Mackenzie were in power during the early part of the recession. In so far as we exercised any control over it, we mitigated its effect, and lessened its dieastrous consequences. It was during this period that the work of lamentation was undertaken by our opponents. By the waters of Babylon they wept. It was said that Canada was a slaughter market, in which the manufacturers were rulned; but this was contradicted by the diminution of our imports, by the falling off of our revenue, under a tar-at a period of greater commercial pros-perity, and by the fact that no class ble of coming under an insolvency law, had, in it, so few failures as those who were devoted to manufacturing pursuits. We were beaten. A new ad-ministration was formed, making confident promises and awakening great expectations. The tariff was increased, under which capital was invested in some new enterprises; whether to the advantage of the whole country or not, I shall not now discuss. Prosperity revived abroad before it did at That revival at home rested upon foreign trade, and when that stimulus failed, the country experienced another period of depression, unexampled in intensity, and in duration, in its history. From 1884 until 1896 the depression in every branch of industry existed, and that panacea, the absence of which it was said caused the lack of prosperity in 1878, when provided, proved no impediment to A DEPRESSION OF TRADE, severe in its intensity. The experience which this country and upon both occasions ought to teach all unprejudiced minds that a policy of restriction, stimulate the commerce, and industrial life of the nation. I am far from contending that where certain industries have been established, and the industrial organism of the nation, because of parliamentary interference, has taken on certain forms, and a little common sense and a little that it is wise to interfere in the opposite direction. It does not follow that what it was a mistake to call into premature existence, it is wise to destroy. There is such a thing, in national life, as industrial organism, and when it has put on certain firms, it is folly, by heroic measures, to endeavor to bring about a change. But as opportunity arises, we can employ our energies in the direction of affording aid to great natural resources which operate in the country's interest, and thereby secure, with the approval of all, immensely greater progress, than by employing our energies against them. Let me call your attention to the efforts put forward by our political opponents to bring about the prosperity of the country. I am not going to question the honesty of their intentions, nor the zeal with which they worked to that Thirty-two years experience, in public life, has convinced me that nothing is gained by the cultivation of suspicions against the honor or the patriotism of those who do not agree with us on question of public policy. Our opponents energetically applied themselves to the construction of railways through the instrumentality of incorporated companies. Some of these companles were incorporated to carry out their projects, some of them without capital sought incorporation to make fortunes out of the liberal donations bestowed by parliament; but, on the whole, a large mileage was added to the railway system of Canada. Fertile lands, that were unoccupied, were made easily accessible: but I am stating the simple fact, when I say that those who relied with confidence on these works, to secure a large influx of people, were disappointed. Anyone who will examine with care the progress of commerce will see how very little progress was made from 1875 until 1895. Indeed, if you examine our trade and navigation returns you will see that if you exclude the commerce of the newer sections of the Dominion, that whatever progress was made, whatever growth is exhibited, is the result of accretion, and the wealth in the Dominion east of Manitoba was less in 1895 than in 1875. Real estate had greatly diminished in value, and all the fixed additions which had been made by the investment of capital, fell far short of equaling the diminished value of real estate alone. Now, I am not affirming that the policy of our predecessors in office was solely responsible for these results, but I am pointing out to you that that policy, which was to greatly increase our prosperity, did not have the effect of either hindering or diminishing what it was desirable, if possible, to prevent. A policy hostile to the mother country proved also inimical to immigration. You will see, by our trade and navigation returns, that for some reason or other was given to our commerce for the first time in twenty years, in the year which closed with June last, and still more satisfactory results are promised in the year now current. The farmers of the country are more prosperous and contented. All classes are more hopeful. The manufacturers and the merchants are doing a profitable business, and those who a few years ago, saw no glimmering of light before them, have seen the mist rise from their pathway, and are now confident of as fair a future for Canada as ever lay before a young state. The vast majority of people in every country have most vividly pressed upon their attention the lessons which come by their own experience. Twenty years ago you told, by a declaration of public policy, the eople of the mother country what you thought to be your own interest, and if it was not their interest also-and you inclined to the belief that it was not-it was so much the worse for What impression were these minds of statesmen, of manufacturers, and of merchants in the United Kingdom? Why, that your patriotism was measured by your pocket; that your patriotism was short sighted, and so you effectually excluded, as of no value, the sympathy of public men of all parties on the other side of the Atlantic. If you except those capitalists who invested money in railways, in Canada, you were without the sympathy or the moral support of the United Kingdom. The declaration of policy was in the last degree selfish, and, in my opinion, unwise, and no Englishman or Scotchman, or Irishman could say how soon under the inspiration of such a declaration of principle, Canada would cease to be British altogether.

A NEW IMPETUS

Two years ago a new departure was made. A tariff, preferential to the mother country, and to other British possessions. was adopted. I need not point out its beneficial effect, in extending the trade between Canada and the mother country. Our trade returns proclaim it, and under a somewhat unsusceptible exterior all Canadians have learned that John Bull possesses a susceptible heart. We have made it clear to him, that we are with him, and of him, and intend that the union which subsists between us, is one that it is our intention shall endure, and so we have his sympathy as it was never had vailed for a few years-that the colonies were of no advantage to the empire-is dead; that a juster view has taken hold of the minds of British statesmen we are sure, and it has awakened a warmer attachment in the minds of the British people, in every part of the empire, who see no reason why the empire should not continue to exist, to the advantage of all, and why an imperial constitution should not far longer in duration, and far more spring up for its government, as free, as satisfactory, as that which exists for the domestic government of each sec-We see already how much we diced minds that a policy of restriction, have gained by a policy which has while it may hamper, can never help to mingled sentiment with economical considerations. We all believe that the preservation of the empire is of immense consequence to every part of it, and that being so, we cannot expect the United Kingdom to continue to bear the entire burden of its defense. public spirit will prove in trade and in immigration a great gain. In the settlement of questions relating to distant and semi-barbarous possessions. we trust her Majest's advisers in the United Kingdom, and in respect to those matters of international concern, which specially concern ourselves, her Majesty's advisers, recognizing our interests, confide the settlement of these questions, on her behalf, largely to us;

AN IMPERIAL CONSTITUTION, on the lines of the constitution of the United Kingdom, is gradually growing up. It deeply concerns our interests; our external relations are bound up in it, and our influence among nations depends upon its continuance. It vitally concerns our future growth, and to deny or disregard that fair measure of responsibility for our our defense as a part of the empire, would exhibit such a total absence of public spirit that one might well despair of the future greatness of Canada. But I will not do my fellow-countrymen the injustice of supposing that they will not cheerfully continue in the path in which they have set out; that they will refuse to see or fail to acknowledge their due meed of responsibility. They fully appreciate the importance of the empire to them, and how important it is to mankind, that it should remain one and indivisible. ECCLESIASTICAL SENSATION

Churches Scored for "Farcical Revivals"-Wide-Open Church.

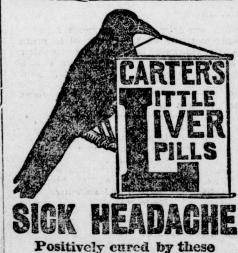

Philadelphia, Nov. 19.—Prof. Sey-mour Eaton, of Chicago, in an address before the Methodist Laymen's Association, created a lively ecclesiastical sensation by scoring the churches of the present for selfishness, farcical "revivals resulting in a rake-off of six or seven boys and give," and "tying up ntributions six days in the week to pay for Sunday sermons and prayers.' One horrified clergyman remarked: "If I did not know the brother to Christian I should suspect that Rob-ert G. Ingersoll or one of his emissaries had been addressing us."

New Orleans, La., Nov. 21.—Erratic Editha Lolita, Countess Landsfelt and Baroness Rosenthal, daughter of Ludwig I. of Bavaria, and Lola Montez, god-child of Pope Pio Nono, divorced wife of Gen. Dis Debar, widow of Chicago millionaire Col. W. J. McGowan and another man, famous author of 'spook" pictures, notorious theosophist and spiritualist—has entered the matrimonial ring again, the latest capture being James Dutton Jackson, a Chicago lawyer, concerned with her in founding a 7,000 acre fruitarian colony near Jackson, Fla. They claim to have entered into a celibate marriage to avoid scandal through their business relations. Their wedding tour will be a trip to India. A heterogenous crowd of children, negroes, spiritualists and theosophists witnessed the marriage.

TUSSLE AT A WEDDING.

Corunna, Mich., Nov. 21.—A marriage a little out of the ordinary took place in this city on Saturday, Justice Robt. McBride officiating. As the words "I pronounce thee man and wife" were spoken to George Reynolds and Hattie Thaver, of Shiawassee, the justice said it was customary for the witnesses to kiss the bride. He took the first kiss himself and the witnesses followed. The bride did not seem to have any objections, so up stepped a stranger, whose looks and general appearance were not very prepossession. He threw his arms around the girl, and endeavored to kiss her. The bride, in indignation, resisted, and a struggle ensued. ending in both falling to the floor. There they floundered around until the fellow finally sat upon the girl, held her hands and imprinted a resounding smack upon her lips. Fortunately everything was taken in fun as far as these two were concerned, and the girl hastily left the court room blushing furiously. Justice McBride laughed so long and heartily over the episode that he failed to collect his fee, but he considers he is well repaid.

NEW YORKER WILLING TO LET HIS WIFE GO.

Owosso, Mich., Nov. 21.-A sensation has just come to light here. In the little town of Amsterdam, in New York State, Mr. and Mrs. Paulding lived a happy wedded life for many years. Eventually the husband noticed his wife's affections were being alienated. He discovered the cause. Another man figured in the case. He was an occasional visitor to the village, and his name was Cole. He was not a more handsome man than the lady's husband, but was more dashing in his manner. Then years of wedded life had somewhat cooled the courtship of the family, although the husband was yet very fond of his wife, but he was diffident, and the wife found in the new friend one who responded to her affectionate nature. Things came to a focus. The husband had to call his wife to order. He did it. The stranger disappeared, ditto the wife.

In Utica, N. Y., six weeks ago they were married by the mayor of the city. Mr. and Mrs. Cole came on to Owosso on their wedding trip. Their honeymoon is not yet over with. They are of counties unbroken. I trust that this mandate will be obeyed, and the work Meanwhile the husband languished in Meanwhile the husband languished in his little hillside home, and regretted his wife's departure. He took down a volume of Tennyson, and, after reading 'Enoch Arden," decided to permit joy to those who have it. He did more: he began proceedings in a divorce court, not that he felt aggrieved, but that he wished his wife to have the freedom she desired. He sent word to an attorney in this city to look the matter up. Deputy Crane called on the Cole couple, charged them with being illegally married, and secured their acquiescence to grant the aggrieved husband a bill. The poor man does not even ask for alimony, but is satisfied that Mrs. Cole is happy.
